

TRANSITION FROM THE NO-CURRENT TO THE YES-CURRENT

Greetings, my dearest friends. God bless everyone of you. Blessed be this hour. We shall continue with the sequence of lectures and shed more light on the topic of the yes- and no- currents. In all the years, we sporadically gave a brief overall view in which a link between certain lectures is established even if some of these lectures were given a long time ago. Such periods always indicate a new phase on the path -- and this often happens at the end of an old or the beginning of a new working season.

This time, I should like to combine the lectures on inner will and outer will, on the soul substance in connection with the images, and the one about the yes- and no-currents. Some of my friends have kept so much in pace with the overall progress of this group that they will immediately be affected by these words. In fact, this lecture will again be the very food they need at this time. Others may come into the benefit of it only a little later when further obstructions are overcome. And this does not mean that the latter cannot catch up -- but it is always entirely up to them.

Such summaries must, offhand, appear repetitious, at least in part, but when you truly experience the truth within your innermost self due to progress made, you will convince yourself that the combining of these topics is a new approach and can indeed become a revelation. It must deepen and widen what you have gained so far. It must fasten it and make it an integral part of your being rather than an outer knowledge.

Let us first recapitulate the meaning of the yes- and no-currents. The yes-current is the expression of the supreme intelligence and creative universal force. It is the life force, whose aspects were also discussed in a separate lecture in the past. It is all that strives toward union, wholeness, harmony, fulfillment, fruition. It is truth and love in its substance and manifestation. It is life embracing and accepting. Its movements are smooth and harmonious -- to bring in still another of our past topics. Anything or anyone adapting himself to the yes-current must be in equal smooth harmony, must reach perfection and fulfillment on forever higher levels of being, must extend the range and experience of unbroken consciousness, unbroken by untruthful concepts and contradictory currents.

The no-current works and affects in the opposite manner, but not in the sense that, in itself as an equal factor, it is evil, manifest in the scheme of creation. It consists rather of ignorance, blindness, distortion, lack of awareness of relevant factors -- relevant to the no-current in whatever way manifested. Ignoring truth, it must be in fear and spread fear. Hence, it is the opposite of love, of everything that leads toward union, fulfillment, fruition. It is discord and spreads disharmony, isolation. Those who are enmeshed in it in any specific manifestation of their lives follow a harsh, disharmonious, rocky, shrinking, or rejecting soul movement that leads into greater blindness, error, and half-truth; into putting the focus and emphasis on aspects of self and others which, even though perhaps correct in themselves, do not lead out of the no-current.

The yes-current is, and conveys, the root of all. It is the cause. It is the inner source and hence provides a realistic, comprehensive grasp of things. Outer manifestations are seen in their proper proportion.

The no-current does not open a further vista than the periphery, the effect, the outer manifestation, and therefore it does not lead to truth, liberation, harmony. No matter how much truth one believes he sees, disturbance, chaos, and destruction remain.

As emphasized last time, you cannot find out of the hopelessness and destruction, the only temporary and pseudosatisfaction of no-current manifestations, unless you become deeply aware of it. This is the primary and essential step. And there is certainly nothing negative about discovering your life-defeating, destructive attitudes that consist of no. Many people believe that a positive attitude toward life means ignoring the negative in oneself. Nothing could be further from the truth. This is a crass misunderstanding of the processes of growth and development. It is impossible to adopt a truthful concept, to replace the old untruthful one, unless one clearly discovers, determines, and understands why the old concept is untruthful. The impetus to transform oneself can never come unless one sees the destructive nature of a false image, evaluates its effects on self and others. This alone will make you summon all your resources to bring about a change. Vague knowledge of the general principles of this process cannot suffice when you deal with a deeply imprinted no-current forming a specific attitude toward a specific life experience.

When you discover specifically how you yourself say no to a special desire, a cherished fulfillment, this is a major transition in your entire development, in your outlook toward life. After such a discovery, you can never be the same as before. For the first time, you comprehend that you do not depend on circumstances outside your control; that you are not a persecuted victim of an unfair and unkind fate; that you do not live in a chaotic world without rhyme or reason where the law of the jungle seems the most appropriate. Such discovery must lead away from the false God concept of a punishing or rewarding deity up in the sky; and it must also lead away from the equally false idea that there is no order, no superior intelligence in the universe. When you discover that you say no to the very thing you desire most, you can no longer be in insecurity, fright, and in the misconception that you are unlucky and inferior. Suddenly the truth of the divine order will come so near that you can grasp it; and this is indeed a wonderful experience even if, at the first inkling, you may not be able to hold on to it. It means the extension of your grasp, the deepening of your understanding, becoming more acutely and specifically aware of the fact that all unhappiness and unfulfillment is not a remote effect of a remote cause, even remote in yourself, but a very direct effect of a cause that is right in front of your eyes if you choose to look at it. Of course, it requires the training of becoming aware of hidden emotional reactions, of subtle, elusive, vaguely felt emotional movements, as it were. But once your mind is accustomed to observing these reactions, it is not far away. The no, that you and you alone recognize, is as distinct as any object in your outer environment you wish to grasp, touch, and see.

Finding such a no must not be a superficial, glib acknowledgment. It is necessary to allow yourself the full impact and significance of it -- first that it exists at all, and then there has to be ascertained why it does exist and on what specific misconceptions it is based. When this is perceived, for the first time hopelessness, defeatism will make room for genuine, not superimposed, hope and a general positive attitude toward life in this specific area. You will glean that what has refused to come to you and made you more hopeless now has a chance to do so because you begin to envision the possibility of a changed concept and attitude in yourself -- even before you are capable of changing. The prospect then certainly exists in a most realistic way. The more this is envisioned the more can the will to change be cultivated.

Before you gain a clear vision on the specific area of its operation, the no-current acts against the very endeavor of discovery and change. Hence, a strongly negative attitude exists manifesting in any number of ways, toward the pathwork itself. Some of my friends have already found that this is so. The moment they successfully fought and overcame their resistance against the work at this particular phase, they found a corresponding no toward a general life situation. While, on a conscious level, an urgent, frantic, hopeless yes (not the yes-current) clamors, cries, and trembles, the underlying no defeats all efforts and makes the entire process truly hopeless.

Many of my friends have experienced that so often before one comes to the most crucial point of transition, the battle against it is equally crucial. The temptation to blind oneself to the true issue -- to project and displace -- these often blur one's memory of past victory; of the proper procedure of prayer, meditation, daily review; of formulating confusions, unanswered questions, vague uneasy feelings in a concise way and tackling them as they barricade the way; of asking for help in this respect; of cultivating one's inner will to overcome all barriers toward seeing the truth about oneself and having the willingness to change; of registering the inner no during these endeavors; of tackling these no's in the only productive way, namely with intent of wanting to see and understand the truth about the matter. We have discussed all this extensively, and I have often reminded my friends; but wherever crisis, doubt, dissatisfaction, exist, these simple procedures have been neglected; and at the moment, the temptation to go into the outer direction of displacement, projection, emphasis even on a truth, but an unrelated truth, was too great.

Opening oneself to the truth is a decisive step toward bringing the personality into the yes-current. Change and transformation of character structure, as well as of false imprints, is hardly possible while one does not understand why such a change is truly desirable. Therefore the path can roughly be divided into two major phases: first, enlisting divine help for recognition of truth; second, enlisting this same agency for the strength, stamina, and ability to change. These two fundamental desires, being part of the great yes-current, must be cultivated in the details of daily living, reactions, thoughts, and feelings. This detail work is the most important aspect of it. What is concentrated on, formulated, intended, issued forth from your consciousness today is surely not the same as it was last month or as it will be a month from now, provided your pathwork is dynamic and not a superficial, generalized endeavor.

Some time ago when we discussed the images, I also mentioned the soul substance, which is the material that registers an individual's outlook on and attitudes to life. When these outlooks and attitudes derive from a truthful impression and therefore a constructive attitude prevails, the soul substance is molded in such a way that the person's life is favorable, agreeable, meaningful, fulfilling, and happy. When the impressions are based on wrong conclusions, the molds into the soul substance create unfavorable, destructive situations. In short, a person's fate is nothing more or less than the sum total of his personality, what it expresses and emanates, how the soul substance is molded in terms of reality or unreality. Man's consciousness is like the sculptor, his soul substance like the material which he uses to create. It is the entire personality, including all levels, which determines the fate. If a person has a healthy, constructive, realistic, truthful concept in a certain area of living, but only in some levels of his personality while other levels express the opposite, such contradiction and opposite aiming affects the soul substance negatively even if the truthful, positive attitude is stronger and conscious, while the negative one remains hidden. It is thus essential that the hidden areas are uncovered in order to understand why a fulfillment remains missing in life.

Only recently, and for the first time, have a number of my friends on the path discovered that in those hidden areas there existed a no which they never could have felt before. On the contrary, they were convinced that they wanted with all their being that which remained unfulfilled -- or that they certainly did not wish an undesirable experience. The mere suggestion that this might be an unconscious striving would have seemed preposterous to them.

Now, such no's are directly connected with the original image, the false concept which molded the image into the soul substance. It is this basic misconception which makes man shrink away, reject, fearfully deny what he wants most, subtly acting in such a way that the image inevitably appears to be confirmed. For example, if you are under the basic misconception that you are inadequate and cannot succeed, this conviction will make you behave in such a way that you will indeed act inadequately, thus reaffirming the original idea. What is more, you will fear success because your very conviction of not being able to live up to it will make it frightening. Once you find this particular no to success, your resultant behavior and mannerism, your obvious and subtle expressions in this regard, you come to understand that your lack of success is not because you are inadequate, but you are inadequate because you think you are and fear any event that might put it to the test.

Changing from a deeply engraved no-current to a yes-current can occur only when this entire process is profoundly understood, when the subtle shrinking away from the desirable goal is observed and finally changed into "I want this goal with all my heart. I have nothing to fear from it." Meditating on why there is nothing to fear, why the old fear was false, and why the new accepting attitude to the life experience, according to the right concept, is entirely safe, is the final step from a no-current to a yes-current. This should be done as daily meditation work, creating a new mold in the soul substance -- this time a flexible, light, truthful one which finally erases the old, rigid, heavy, untruthful one.

When finding misconceptions of "not deserving" all that happiness, this is often connected with the faulty God image. It is such false ideas that make your wish capacity weak, if not always entirely negative and destructive, so at least neutral, not issuing forth the strong, clear, unbroken consciousness of wanting and deserving the experience. The misconception that striving for personal fulfillment on all levels is identical with selfishness and greed is another obstacle to a healthy yes-current. When such general wrong conclusions mingle with personal images, they are stubborn hurdles which can be eliminated only by full recognitions of all connected aspects and by formulating a new outlook and attitude.

On this path, you have learned occasionally to review your entire life in the light of progress already made so as to determine not only in what respect you have outgrown old obstructions, but also what remains to be accomplished. When you view as yet unfulfilled areas of living, finding the underlying no-current, it is also helpful to compare these areas with the aspects of your life in which you are fulfilled. Then consider the underlying yes-current. The subtle but distinct expression of certainty that this good thing is yours, will always easily be yours, that it does not present a difficulty and does not induce fear that you may lose it. It might be wise to also investigate that in these areas you feel deserving; that you are willing to pay the price, to give; that, actually, your overall attitudes in those healthy areas vastly differ from your feelings, emanations, expectations, reservations, etc. in the unfulfilled areas. Such a comparison is a very useful and helpful endeavor which will yield much further understanding. Distinctly feel the difference between your approach, emotions, and subtle expressions in the healthy, fulfilled, happy life situations and those in which you consistently find a frustrating, unhappy pattern.

It is not easy, but certainly feasible to come from the no-current into the yes-current. You cannot possibly come out of the no-current so long as you cling to the conviction that you have nothing to do with your problem, that you are helpless in being able to change your predicament, that you cannot help feeling no. But when you decide that the final decisive factor is you, your will, your determination, then the end of your suffering is near. Say "I want to come out of it. In order to do so, I want to know specifically what obstructs the way at this moment. I know that my real self, that the constructive universal forces help and guide me the moment I decide to do something about it. I will be ready to see what comes up." Continue to cultivate your activities in this direction. What had seemed impossible will suddenly become feasible. Relaxed meditation, concentration, and a minimum of daily self-observation cannot possibly be dispensed with. These are the tools. Learning to use them in the appropriate, well-pointed, adequate way at any given phase of the path is part of your growing process.

I have often mentioned that nothing in itself is right or wrong, healthy or unhealthy, constructive or destructive. It always depends on the how. It is the same with feeling, experiencing, expressing the attitude of "I want to," regarding a particular fulfillment. The mere fact of the existence of it is no guarantee that it is a yes-current. Apart from the opposite desire on an unconscious level, such a "yes" may be that of greed and fear, of too much wanting. Greed and fear are products of the no-current. If there would be no hidden no-current, there would be no doubt that you can have; therefore there would be no fear that you may not have. Therefore you need not be greedy that you must have. For if you are in truth and in harmony with the cosmic forces, the yes-current will function as a very natural and easy and calm flow within yourself. It does not need any pressure. Into the yes-current you can issue the "I want" in a fullness and wholeness which is entirely bare of anxiety and doubt and greed. Yes or no, "I want to" or "I do not want to" can only be determined as to be expressions of the yes- or no-current if they are closely observed, if one listens to the flavor of any harsh, disharmonious, disturbing emotion contained in it.

I have often mentioned that contact with the divine spark, or your real self, is an outcome of this pathwork. Some of my friends are beginning to experience this indescribable event. The safety, security, conviction of truth, the harmony, and rightness of it are worth all the effort of overcoming resistance. It alone can truly guide you. It not only is the yes-current, but it inspires you to strengthen the already existing yes-current; to correct all faulty impressions; to give you all the insight you need; to give you the strength to change and transform. In order to have it manifest, you must deliberately contact it, require it to answer you, to show you the way. The outer brain so often stands in the way. It believes that it alone exists and determines. It truly must determine to let the greater brain operate and determine your life. Many of you have often experienced that it responds sometimes instantly, sometimes soon, but it always does. Yet, this too is forgotten, as are the victories after overcoming resistance. Let this innermost self, this greater intelligence within you, answer your confusions, guide you further to the truth you need to know about yourself, and strengthen you to change false images, misconceptions, and to swing from the no-current -- a deeply hopeless, doubting, destructive, dark, negative outlook -- into the yes-current with all its promise which cannot help being fulfilled.

When you discover again and again for a certain time the persistence of the subtle but distinct no to a cherished fulfillment, a fearful cringing away from it that you cannot explain and which can only be detected by looking very closely, it is of the greatest importance that you do not argue it away; that you are not impatient with yourself; that you do not deny its existence in the wishful thinking that by doing so, it will go away. This never works. Rather, acknowledge it, draw it out further into consciousness, and prepare yourself for finding the answer for the barrier. Pose the proper questions in order to get the answer, realizing that you must not shy from any effort, for without divine help man is incapable of fully accomplishing any great goal. What appears like the greatest contradiction to the spiritually and emotionally immature person becomes self-evident truth for the spiritually and emotionally mature individual. One must be fully self-sufficient and independent in order to come into the full realization that God's help is essential, that this help has to be demanded by the independent, self-sufficient person, as an act of will. The immature refuse to stand on their own feet. They desire a higher authority to be responsible for them, but lack the humility to recognize that man's greatness lies in his divine self. The divine self, however, is not up in heaven, but deep within the self where it can be summoned and consulted. More and more it will be this divine self that manifests, and the little self will integrate into it.

An additional factor of help on this particular road is the element of talking. This has proven to be true before, in other phases of the work, and it is of equal importance in this phase. By talking out what you want, what the so far recognized obstruction in you is, the extent of it, and the reason for the no-current observed, the therapeutic value of this is way beyond your present comprehension. As you talk to another person, things will take shape and gain a clarity that you missed as long as you merely thought about them or even wrote them down. Also, the insight an uninvolved outsider may gain and point out to you is often, at a certain moment, impossible to attain by oneself because one is too deeply involved. In talking out the problem area, a pressure is relieved which sets valuable energy free, and a new proportion is gained. Something begins to change inside way before you even know it. Something is set in motion when you (a) deliberately tap your divine self for answers and guidance, and (b) when you talk out the pressure area. The effect of these two important activities will be experienced by anyone who follows this advice. Again I emphasize, no one needs to blindly accept my word for it.

Talking out of the pressure area also quite often needs to overcome a no-current. For wherever the trouble festers, a deep shame exists. We discussed this before, and it needs to be repeated here. Whatever the misconception, the original image with its false premises, with its concomitant negative emotions, causes deep shame. Whether one feels frightened, hurt, or whatever, the impression of being isolated with a guilty, shameful secret, making him different from others, requiring a pretense, can best be exposed as utterly false by breaking through in talking to another person. As one gets started, the shame begins to vanish until it shows itself as the illusion it always was and which has caused so much suffering. I should like to point out a difference between talking about the problem, your feelings and reactions, and talking all of them out. The former is often a necessary and good beginning, but when one gets to the latter stage, one is very close to the goal of swinging into the yes-current in this particular area.

The wiser, inner self knows the necessity and subtly nudges the outer personality. When a close contact with this inner self is not established on all levels, such nudging is misinterpreted. The accumulated pressure regarding the need to talk is put into unproductive channels because the little self fears and wants to avoid (often unconsciously) uncovering the "shame." The no-current is at work. When the pressure to talk is relieved in the inappropriate quarters, one automatically concentrates on matters not immediately connected with one's personal area of trouble that need and wait to be brought out. Often this may even have destructive side-effects apart from hindering the personal growth process that one is ready for. Disharmony is spread without the will or intention of doing so, often even in good will and partly with correct insights into matters that have nothing to do with the self. But in this spirit, the most truthful observation will become discolored and be but a half-truth, whereas any observation will be acceptable to others if one does not shirk something in oneself. If the pressure from the inner need to talk out one's afflicted area is diverted into other channels, disorder and stagnation follow. The momentary relief from the dischanneling is like the momentary pleasurable feeling of giving in to resistance or to any destructive impulse.

The relief of truth, as opposed to the burden of misconception, can fully become yours the moment you are on the road of overcoming the shame of the deepest inner lesion of your soul. Again, this cannot be done in one sweep, but if you tackle it in constant honest self-observation, checking how you stand and, above all, acknowledging the fact of it without self-deception, and, in addition, requesting the help of your higher self, success will come. You will then know what it means to live without shame, without the need to be isolated, without the burden of hiding your true self. Do not dissipate the energy by letting yourself be tempted away from it. You thereby deprive yourself of a very necessary spiritual and emotional medication.

Every tight or too firm conviction that is in connection with your work on the path should be examined. Are you truly open to consider an opposite view as well? Only then can you perceive the voice of your higher self if it should wish to convey something different. And only then will you know that your first conviction was indeed right for you. This deep inner certainty can only come when you are willing and ready to accept something other than your preference.

As you must deeply want the truth about yourself in order to obtain it, so you must deeply want to transform. Is there a soft, hidden no? Why? What is the fear? The same no exists to the fulfillment you wish from the outside, as to the willingness to transform inside of yourself.

I now would like to discuss briefly a point which has puzzled some of my friends although their confusion on this point is not always conscious. It is the fact that the pathwork, at a certain point, appears to aggravate negative feelings. I know that you know some answers to this question, such as the obvious one that hitherto unconscious material has now become conscious and can no longer work against the interests of the person. This is temporarily bothersome. But there is another factor here which is important to understand.

When a young human being starts out in life with his personal images and misconceptions, he has concocted certain "remedies" against the illusory dread he wishes to avoid. These are the pseudosolutions, his idealized self-image. With these, he hopes to cope against what he fears in life.

Since he is young, vigorous, and not yet discouraged by repeated disappointments of the nonworking pseudosolutions (and when successful in spite of, rather than because of them, he ascribes it to their efficacy); hopelessness, depression, a sense of futility and meaninglessness with life are still absent. If he lives on with all the burden of error, he very gradually comes to the point of utter discouragement. Each time his pseudosolutions do not work, he despairs, but since the entire process of pseudosolutions and what they are supposed to avoid are unconscious, he has no way of remedying the situation. In fact, he is inwardly convinced that he has not worked hard enough to make his pseudosolutions work, to bring his false, idealized self across. He believes his inadequacy goes so far that he cannot even successfully pretend, and if only he could get to the point of living these imagined "salvations," all would be well. The idea of giving them up seems like a tremendous danger, utterly exposing him to annihilation, humiliation, and shame. Needless to emphasize, he is unaware of all these feelings. The no-current is used in order to avoid the imagined threat. When the pathwork demolishes his pretense and inefficient pseudosolutions instead of strengthening them, as unconsciously he hoped, he is in panic. He fights for his "life." And he feels that he has lost ground, rather than gained, because the old ways of coping with life can no longer be used by him. His conscious self now sees their preposterousness, and he can no longer employ them. But the new concepts are not yet formed. In this interim stage, he finds himself in a vacuum which he often unwittingly prolongs by fighting against going forward. Truthful concepts cannot mold his life as long as he precariously balances himself on the point of confusion, despair, and stubborn refusal to open up and go further. I wish all of my friends would deeply meditate about this factor, seeing whether it already applies to them. If not, it could still come to pass. Are they prepared to meet it in the most constructive, wise, and knowing way?

False solutions and means to cope with life create false strength, false security, false happiness, or for that matter, if it seems expedient to the person, false unhappiness (in order to gain certain results from others or to punish them). The false, superimposed tendencies have to disappear before genuine strength, security, happiness can be a part of the self. How can a genuine yes-current exist if part of your personality is expressing false emotions? It is exactly the same with the true and the false God concept. The false God image has to be dissolved before the genuine God concept can become part of the psyche, of the innermost regions of the personality. It can hardly be otherwise. It is an unrealistic expectation that first the new is built, and then the old, obsolete goes away. The degree of pain at dissolving the false old ways and transforming into new outlooks and life attitudes solely depends on the strength of the no-current opposing the process, and on the degree to which this no-current can be inactivated by awareness and observation, and the measure of subsequent appropriate activity and treatment of it.

For the yes-current to express in any given area of your life and personality, your entire being must be of one piece, a wholeness. Your consciousness cannot be divided with different levels expressing different aims, goals, opinions, concepts, and emotions. The yes-current cannot manifest by talking yourself into it. Many systems and approaches knowing the truth are all too often misunderstood and abused. Hence, people are misled into a temporary hopefulness and a positive approach to life, into a temporary success in certain ways, but it cannot be whole, real, and permanent unless all levels of your being are filled with one expression and there is no area left that does not know the truth, that nurtures doubts and fears, and that does not express the truth. Nor can this happen unless some parts of the character structure are transformed, are truly changed, "are reborn," as Jesus said. Such a complete reorientation of the personality cannot be a slipshod affair. It does not come cheap and easy. It requires your total involvement and investment into the process. It demands some fierce overcoming of stubborn, easily misleading resistance, and the turning away of temptation from the self. There is no short cut except that it appears easy when the transformation has already taken place and the psyche is already free from division and contradiction in any given area of success.

When you reach this state of oneness with yourself, with your innermost divine self, wholly existing in the flow and harmony of the yes-current, you have nothing to fear. You stand on firm ground. Fulfillment of any expression of your self can easily be yours.

When you allow yourself to shed all falseness due to expressing and formulating your will to grow in this direction, more and more you must come to see that the God you unconsciously feared does not exist. The God who does exist knows no limitation in squandering happiness that is all yours for the asking. You do not have to choose -- as man often unconsciously believes -- between one form of fulfillment or another. He may dare to express fulfillment in health and a happy partnership and mate relationship, but he feels selfish and greedy if his consciousness also expresses the wish for a fruitful career. The false God image, also existing in those who consciously deny a superior Creator, makes them miserly with their own fulfillment. But this is not God's way nor will. It is your way and will, born out of your inner limitations. Once they are shed one by one, paradise can be on earth, just as hell can be, always according to your inner state of being. Those limitations are the wrong ideas you have about life, about yourself, and about your role in life. When you understand that selfhood and self-government are synonymous with following the voice and the will of your divine self, that these two concepts are not only not mutually exclusive and contradictory but interdependent; you will comprehend the vast difference of the real self and the insignificant outer brain, the difference between the tight, anxious, doubtful, greedy pseudo yes-current and the relaxed, calm inner knowledge of all the good things in life belonging to you of the real yes-current. And you will experience the truth of true spiritual awakening: that the tremendous power and imminence of the divine is at your immediate disposal; that without it, you cannot truly accomplish anything; and, in order to contact it, you have to stand on your own feet dispensing with the necessity of having another authority responsible for you. Every effect in your life can be brought to your inner causes, but man struggles against this truth, often more than reason warrants. In all sorts of obvious or veiled, crass or subtle ways, he seeks the reason for his life circumstances outside himself.

Many of you have experienced an immediate answer to the Godself in you, to the manifestation of the yes-current, to the liberation of overcoming resistance, with all of its wonderful recognitions. Do not forget these truths, for recollecting them will make it easier to proceed. Every time you ask for the manifestation of the divine within yourself and around your person, it comes whether it concerns knowing the truth about yourself, or whether it applies to resolving a difficult situation, or whether you wish to transform into a more truthful, productive person. Utilize more and more this contact; let it instruct you, show you, open new ways for you. It is of unlimited wisdom and power, of infinite love. If you but use this great power more specifically and regularly rather than only occasionally, you will all come to the full realization that this path brings you to true liberation in every possible respect.

Nothing stands in the way to a full, fulfilled, rich life. These are not empty promises. All the tools you need are given to you, but you and you alone must use them. Often, instead of fully using these tools, instead of wanting to change the attitudes that cause your unhappiness, you grumble and blame the pathwork for not living up to its promises -- as though it ever promised to do the work for you. No approach can ever do that, it can only show you what you must do, how you must change so that your life can change for the better. But those of you who steadfastly make progress, overcoming, fighting against the no within, doing the work day in and day out, do register the growing conviction and knowledge that you are slowly stepping out of confinement and darkness into the freedom and light of truth. Anyone who claims that he has done his best, but has not succeeded, is not in truth, is suffering from self-delusion. He may make good efforts in the areas of lesser importance, but he refuses to see the truth where it hurts most, where he still misses liberation.

Are there any questions now?

QUESTION: In connection with this lecture, I found out that my no-current is more superficial, while inwardly there is more of a yes-current than I thought. Could you explain this?

ANSWER: Yes, this is very true. With you, the process is reversed from the usual. Your astounding progress in a relatively short time, especially in view of the seriousness of your problems when you entered this path, accounts for the fact I always try to convey to all my friends: namely, that the inner, unconscious is the more potent force determining the outcome, regardless of the conscious will. The conscious will is of immeasurable importance to set the direction, to do what is necessary, but it must also be geared in the direction to make the unconscious conscious so as to remove all obstacles and division within the self.

Now, the reason for this being so with you is that by nature you are a much more constructive, accepting, positive person than you artificially make yourself. Once the artifice is shed, this truer self appears and expresses more freely. You cling to the artificially negative side, almost as a sort of superstition as though you believe that you can ward off real unhappiness by indulging in a false one. You express it with this attitude: "If I say no, life will not say no to me and will not treat me too badly." Do you understand?

QUESTION: Yes. And how!

QUESTION: I feel that I have the no-current inward and outward. Everything is no. Can you help me why?

ANSWER: Yes, I can help you why, and I can also help you how to come out of it. The why is because you fear that if you do not say no, a specific inadequacy and shame would have to be tackled. It is of course no real inadequacy or real shame, but you think so unconsciously. The No seems to eliminate the necessity of looking closer. For the moment, you may not be able to feel this yet, but you will if you proceed with your pathwork. Once you do, it will become easier to tackle the inner enemy -- the no.

As for immediate advice how to proceed, take any of the many little no's coming up in your work, in your daily life -- one after the other as you observe them in your self-confrontation. Take this no, and enter into your private meditation, all alone, peaceful, and relaxed. Such meditation might be somewhat like this, in essence, but use your own words and formulation. "Why do I say no? I have the power not to say no, and I now say yes to really and truly wanting to find out this and that particular no." "With all my heart, I say yes to wanting to understand the no." Take one at a time. First you will feel a strong negative pull against it, but, expecting it, you are prepared for it and do not allow it to dissuade you. You go on saying, "The truth cannot harm me although something ignorant in me rebels against it. In spite of it, I say yes. It has no power over the way I direct my will and my endeavors. This very same no has brought much destructiveness and misery. I do not allow it to rule over me any longer. I take the reins in my hands." If you do this daily for a while and open yourself up to what comes in the spirit of: "For better or worse, I want to find out why the no stops me from all that could bring happiness to me and to my surroundings. I no longer wish to reject all that is life-giving, outgoing, unifying. I no longer wish to embrace isolation and hostility." When you meditate, in your own words, in such a way, enlisting the divine forces inside your own being, you will, indeed experience a great transformation. The first time will be most difficult, but if you persevere, it will become easier and yield more and more results. And I beg of you, choose to remember the many times on this path you were in a fierce and fearful no; but after you overcame it, the relief and release, the renewed energy, the increased understanding and health, and also the knowledge and certainty that what you had feared before was entirely groundless, all that was in proportion to the fear and resistance that you harbored. Make use of the considerable progress already made rather than choosing, than letting yourself slide into inertia again. Then you will yet experience the greatest victory and liberation so far! You will indeed enter a crucial new phase. Some of my friends, without their active and deliberate intent in this respect, follow these lectures as they are given. Others limp behind, but they may catch up tomorrow. When you follow through this advice, you will be right in the swing of it, you will truly make the transformation from a downward curve, from the no-current, to a building up, to the upward life-giving stream, to the yes-current.

Now, my dearest friends, all other questions must be deferred to our next session just dealing with the topic of these lectures. You are all blessed. May these words be more than words, may they remain not theory, but may they become the tools they are meant to be. Thus you will finally allow yourself to be happy. You will no longer cringe from fulfillment -- and then complain. Be in peace. Be in God!
