

RÉSUMÉ OF THE BASIC PRINCIPLES OF THE PATHWORK: ITS AIM AND PROCESS

Greetings my dearest friends here. Blessings and love, strength and joy are always and ever present within and around you, permeating you to the degree you allow it. With great joy do I resume the help and the guidance I am privileged to give you. This coming working season promises again further progress, further steps toward the realization of your ultimate being. It is going to be an intense year for all of those who follow this path. As in previous years, we shall attempt to proceed very directly into areas that are most necessary to explore and experience. Past efforts and success will make new approaches possible and will make your present efforts more rewarding. In fact, I may say that you will often find that what seemed in the past tedious effort or a too painful price to pay for future gains, to be really a most joyful and fulfilling experience. Also, the bond among you will be drawn closer, and more love and unity will reign due to your growing state, your moving energies, and your expanded consciousness.

I have been asked, at the end of the last working season, to give a résumé of the teachings which I have brought to you in all these years -- a condensation, as it were. And this is indeed a very useful new beginning. I shall proceed now to do this, as best as I can. For it is not easy to summarize the many steps that are all necessary, the many areas that have to be looked into, the many angles where confusions might exist. And these confusions must be straightened out. The language itself presents its difficulties and limitations, as you know, so that misunderstandings can easily occur. But whatever you do not understand, whatever is not clear, we can take up in future sessions together.

First of all, in order to really understand the nature of this path, it is important to understand to some degree the nature of the entity you are. What are the various components of the human entity? Whatever explanation I can give you here is of course somewhat oversimplified, but it is nevertheless valid. Use it as a map that gives an overall idea of the being you have to deal with when you approach yourself and, therefore, others.

Man consists of different levels of consciousness. Each level of consciousness represents a conglomerate of attitudes, beliefs, and feelings. These levels of consciousness are often at total variance with each other. These levels of consciousness express different states of development in the evolutionary movement. In the spiritual world they are expressed as spheres. Your state of consciousness always creates its own world with its own laws, its own value system, its own philosophy, its own reality, its own mores. Each world (state of consciousness) has a different degree of awareness of the cosmic, ultimate reality and therefore also different degrees of limitations. These limitations determine the extent to which the abundance of the universe can be experienced. Only the ultimate reality of man's innermost being, which is the true world, is unbroken unity of being; eternal, ever flowing life; and creativity, joy, and self-expression. This world does not exist in some faraway place. It permeates everything that exists. In fact, the various levels of consciousness draw you into their corresponding worlds. They do not exist in space and time, but in a reality that transcends both. Thus they can overlap. Time, space, and movement are limited conceptions of the human mind -- of this particular state of consciousness. Thus, in a reality that transcends the human, physical one, two or more worlds can easily exist in one and the same space.

An entity who is not yet unified and has not yet realized his ultimate nature expresses these different levels of consciousness and is thus drawn into their corresponding "worlds," either alternately or simultaneously. While in the body, this manifests in different moods, different perceptions, and experiences. How often does it happen that what you feel deeply as the truth of life and yourself today may be totally reversed tomorrow when you experience life and yourself very differently! When you are drawn simultaneously into two conflicting worlds of your own making, you will experience conflict and confusion. When out of the body, this phenomenon manifests as being drawn into the actual environment the respective level of consciousness has created, and then as being drawn into the created world of another level, on and on -- as long as these many states of consciousness exist in the still disunified personality. The less self-awareness exists, the less does the entity realize that the world he experiences at any given phase of his evolution is not the ultimate one and not the only one of his own creation. The states of limited awareness of reality necessarily create suffering, and when this unhappy state of existence is believed to be the only reality, apprehension, fear, and despair are inevitable. The illusion of these perceptions can only be eliminated by the arduous path of bringing all your inner worlds into awareness.

The gamut of the various degrees of awareness, hence that of joy and peace, or their lack, is truly immensely varied -- until the ultimate state of reality is being realized.

The human condition can best be expressed in a broad, overall way by the following levels of consciousness: the higher self, which is the God consciousness; the lower self, which is the demonic self; and the mask self, which hides the demonic. Needless to say, there are many degrees and stages within these levels. Their overlapping, their canceling each other out, the confusion they create, and their indirect effects and chain reactions are to be explored, understood, and mastered. That is the path. All these aspects of the personality can be conscious or unconscious to varying degrees. The less awareness of any of these states a person has, the more conflict exists in his life, the less he is equipped to deal with life, himself, and other people, and, certainly, the farther he is removed from the realization of his ultimate, divine self.

Lack of awareness comes from being split off from the reality of one's real, higher, divine self. But one is also split off or, rather, unaware of the lower, as well as the mask self. This creates misunderstanding, illusions, misconceptions. It is one of the aspects of this pathwork to find these misconceptions and correct them.

Let us now shed some light first on the aim of this pathwork and then on the process. The aim is, as I said, to unify all these levels so that the mask and lower selves dissolve, and only the true higher self manifests and expresses itself. Only when the lower and mask selves are entirely conscious and their exact manifestation understood can misconceptions be corrected. Lack of awareness creates misconceptions. Misconceptions create negative energy and feelings. Negative energy and feelings create suffering. This chain must be reversed and can be reversed only when awareness of the mask self, of the lower self, and finally of the higher self can be attained through various processes and approaches.

It cannot be denied that to expand the consciousness of the limited mind represents a tremendous difficulty. For man has only this same limited mind at his disposal when he starts out. Thus this limited mind must transcend itself in order to realize its unlimited power and scope. The path therefore constantly requires that the mind bridges the gap of its own limitations by considering new possibilities, by making room for other alternatives for the self, for life, and for expressing the self in life. This demands making the effort of coming out of an old, set, and apparently comfortable model. But this comfort is the greatest illusion. However, all illusions seem real as long as they are not being considered as possibly being illusions and as long as no other alternatives are allowed.

The overall state of consciousness of the human condition is one of duality, or the opposites. I have often discussed some of the many aspects of the confusion created by the dualistic perception of reality. I do not have the time to go into this topic now at length; I have devoted many lectures to it. Here I only want to say that the confusion created by the dualistic perception of reality must be straightened out on all levels and in exact detail. This means conception, and finally perception, change. I want to emphasize once again that the unification of the fragmented self cannot take place as long as the world is perceived in a dualistic form. When issues, people, the self, the world, life, ideas, attitudes, appear to be either good or bad, right or wrong, there is distortion of reality and consequently suffering although the connection between the distortion and the suffering are not obvious to him who is still involved in this illusory picture of life. Every conceivable attitude, feeling, idea, and human expression can be both. It is one of the most important marks of evolution and growth when this is experienced and no longer a mere theory. I recommend that the various lectures dealing with various aspects of this topic be studied carefully so that you can connect the importance of this issue with your emotional and spiritual state.

The process of expanding the mind and of transcending its own momentary limitations can only be a conscious and deliberate effort toward this goal. The effort is not a labor of the will and mind, but an opening process that first considers, as I said, new alternatives, which can eventually become a reality. When man experiences himself only as this cut off, powerless ego and when he consequently tries to put all the energy and power at his disposal into this ego, he must fail. But when he allows that he may indeed be an expression of an as yet unmanifest deeper, wider, wiser, and more loving divine self, this divine self is thereby sufficiently freed to manifest. Hence this person bridges the gap from ignorance and alienation to an open state of mind that questions, waits, considers, probes for an actual experience of the ultimate truth. Such an experience is called faith.

When the mind remains within the fences of its present limitations, transcendence cannot occur. The attempt to transcend the momentary limited mind and to experience the divine consciousness is called meditation. The process of making aware of and dealing with the mask self and the lower self will greatly speed up if the higher self is called into play and directed by the conscious mind to give specific guidance.

There are two basic approaches to human spirituality. The one is to emphasize, concentrate, and focus on the divine possibility within, until this possibility becomes a reality. Many movements exist which have practices and teachings and exercises that help actively and effectively toward this end. All energies and concentration are directed toward cultivating and enhancing, manifesting and expressing the divine reality within. However, this does not necessarily mean that the other fragmentary levels of consciousness are thereby automatically eliminated and incorporated into the divine center. It is quite possible and, indeed, a frequent occurrence that such practices genuinely bring out the real higher self, yet leave the undeveloped aspects of consciousness intact. Many entities have such an intense longing to realize their divine, inherent nature that they forget, while in the body, that they came to fulfill a mission in the universal plan. This mission is the purification and growth of undeveloped "cosmic matter." In order to do this, the second approach must be adopted. And that is shedding the light of conscious awareness and experience on the inner distortions, the ugliness, the darkness, the evil, the suffering, as well as on the inner truth, the beauty, the love, the goodness, the joy. This requires one to develop a fine sensitivity so that the organic rhythm and alternation that each individual path expresses can be perceived: to know when to focus more on the one aspect, when more on another; when to concentrate on the higher self so as to strengthen its staying power and make it possible for it to give further guidance; when to pay attention to the lower self with its hidden evil, its dishonesty and cheating, its camouflaged hate and malice; when to focus on the specific devices of the mask self -- how it masks itself, what defenses it uses in order to keep the lower self hidden, etc.; and to know when the moment is here to experience feelings that have been avoided. The fine alternations must be sensed both by the person and by the helper, for everyone has a different rhythm.

There are periods and phases when the main concentration should be on the negative aspects, on the distortions, and on the ugliness; for the danger of escaping into the positive, rather than using the positive attitudes for the purpose of purification, is always great. There are other periods and phases when the positive should be concentrated on. Do not overlook the fact that it is possible to get in touch with the divine self genuinely and then use it to camouflage the split off, distorted aspects of consciousness. The divine is neutral and will follow the will direction of consciousness in its immutable way.

It must be quite clear for all of you who are in or want to join this work that our approach to spirituality and to the realization of the spiritual self is the second of the two ways. The greater pain and discomfort that appear to be a by-product of this path are also an illusion, for as long as any blocked off, split off, dark, distorted cosmic substance exists, suffering is inevitable whether or not you choose to know this now. Our path is a taxing path, but it is reality. It does not lead to illusion and to splitting off. It brings out into concrete experience what may still smolder underground and unmanifest and what is bound to reach the surface and create experience at one time or another. It is always easier and quicker to transcend a state when we have deliberately confronted it, when the self accepts his present inner state and wants to go through it rather than when confrontation comes inexorably as a lawful, rhythmic, universal movement on an entity's evolutionary journey. An entity who chooses such a path incorporates himself into the divine plan. The aim of this approach to spiritual reunion is to help toward a re-unification of everything that has ever split itself off.

Now we come to the approach itself. Again, we summarize and discuss the fundamentals but cannot go into all the manifold details and considerations. The levels to be worked with on the path -- and each level in a different way -- are the following aspects of the human personality: (1) the level of mind and thought; (2) the level of will; (3) the level of feelings; (4) the level of physicality and physical expression.

When all these levels are conscious, when their inevitable divergence from each other is faced and accepted, a unification process can begin. When the lower self is understood, accepted, and dissolved, when the mask is dispensed with, then unification in the spiritual reality of being can take place in a realistic way. Now let us see what the different approaches to the different personality levels are.

(1) The level of mind must deal with the concepts, that is to say the misconceptions. As my friends who have been in this work for a longer time know, you have indeed discovered and ousted a number of misconceptions that have governed you. Thoughts and thought processes that are directed into an erroneous channel affect all other levels. They always create vicious circles. These vicious circles entrap you, they put you into a hopeless situation. And it is indeed true that as long as you move within this vicious circle, there is no hope. But the moment the vicious circle is broken, you are liberated from the entrapment. It is therefore imperative to clearly see, understand, and give up these components of attitude and behavior that create the vicious circle. This always means to basically change a concept, a thought process, an approach to reality. The misconception must be recognized as such: why it is one, how it exists, and in what way does it lead into a vicious circle. How does the vicious circle proceed? What is the corresponding true conception? How would living according to it lead into a wide open world, into a benign sequence of creative self-expression? All this must be clearly perceived, understood, made conscious, and eventually emotionally experienced. It is not enough to have a theoretical understanding of these inner processes. Only through the emotional experience can the misconception be replaced by a true conception. Only then will the true conception take root in the psyche and open up new channels of functioning, of spontaneous behavior (as opposed to behavior based on conditioned reflexes), and of creative expression of feelings.

Misconceptions can be quite conscious, but you do not necessarily know that they are misconceptions. Therefore your conscious beliefs must also be tested and investigated. Misconceptions can be vaguely conscious in a nebulous way when your actions and reactions testify to the fact that you are governed by misconceptions, but you have not concisely specified what these are and what their consequences are. Therefore this also must be done. Or misconceptions can be unconscious. In that case, the pathwork must deal with making them conscious. This can only be done by examining the life manifestation. One's life does not lie. It expresses exactly what you really, inwardly believe. You may consciously claim that you are a loving person and indeed believe in love. But if you suffer from a loveless life, it testifies clearly that somewhere inside of you, you do not believe in love, do not want to love, and have your "reasons" (i.e., misconceptions) for not loving. Hence, unconscious misconceptions can only be unearthed by looking at the person's life, his suffering, his frustration, his unfulfilled longings.

All levels must be dealt with in the conscious and in the unconscious. These two approaches vary from personality aspect to personality aspect. You have to work differently with the level of mind than with the levels of will, of feeling, and of the body.

(2) In order to work on the level of will, you have to understand first of all that there is an outer and an inner will. To put it differently, there is a voluntary and an involuntary will action. These two levels of will also have to be scrutinized, understood, and made conscious. Where distortions, misconceptions, negativities exist in a psyche, the will forces are out of balance. Where the will should be active, it is often paralyzed and stagnant. Where it should be receptive and passive, it is tight, forced, and active. Thus, a reestablishment of balance must occur as the purification proceeds. On the level of mind, you must come to distinguish in what areas you must act, initiate -- in short, use your inherent capacity to will. This may apply to actions or to an attitude expressed toward life -- will action also applies to attitudes. You must also discern in what areas to momentarily accept your limitations of will and let go of the forcing current of an overactive will. This reestablishing of will currents cannot be done by the outer will. If this is being recognized and the pressure of the outer will relaxed, the inner will can come to the fore and begin its functioning. How much frustration is incurred by man pushing with his outer will and thus prohibiting the inner, relaxed will to manifest; or by the outer will being prevented from reaching out into life!

Again, my friends who are involved in this pathwork will recognize much of the ground already covered.

(3) The level of feelings -- again, where there are misconceptions of the mind (whether they be conscious or unconscious) and where there is an imbalance of the inner and outer will level, feelings are destructive, stagnant, painful. The energy of the feeling body is paralyzed and blocked. Therefore it is a substantial aspect of any process of unification and purification to experience the feeling level -- or the feeling body, if you will -- and let out the paralyzed blocks of feelings, whatever they may be. They must be dealt with on the conscious level in order to be rechanneled constructively (destructive feelings can certainly be constructively expressed). If this is not being done, negative, painful feelings will stagnate on an unconscious level and prohibit the personality from healthy functioning, from good feelings, from the vital energy flow which is the nature of universal life. This inevitably leads to an indirect and destructive acting out of such feelings, of which most of the time the personality is entirely unaware. He sees no other alternative than acting, reacting, and being the way he is; and he overlooks the fact, that is often crystal clear to his environment, that he acts out negative feelings.

So, in dealing with the feeling level, you have to learn how to get in touch with feelings that are locked up in you. This, too, may be discernible only indirectly -- by the manifestations of your life, by your life experience.

The evoking of feelings is done, as most of you know, by a variety of approaches, which we hardly need to enumerate here. It suffices to say that the experiencing and expressing of feelings that were deemed to be unacceptable and/or unbearable, and the ability to sustain them, to handle them, is the only way a person can lose fear, anxiety, and tension. As long as he hopes against hope that his life should be free from painful feelings, he hopes for an illusion. And deep down he knows it, yet clings to it. Hence he is afraid and feels shaky and inadequate. But when his own feelings can be experienced, no matter what they are, he becomes automatically secure, unafraid, and therefore relaxed. And this state of being relaxed and loose in mind, will, feeling, and body is the indispensable prerequisite for pleasure and thus for fulfillment.

The refusal to experience painful feelings rests on the misconception that they will annihilate you or that they will prove that you are no good. This misconception must be challenged and replaced. If it is not, you will not allow yourself to experience painful feelings. The refusal to do so also creates a tight will current so as to ward off what you believe to be annihilation. Hence, the will must be relaxed so that it becomes possible for you to experience what is already in you and what must paralyze all your best functioning unless you go through it and thus transcend it.

You can perceive now how the different levels interact. And now we come to (4) the level of the body, of physical expression. Since it is impossible that an attitude existing on one level does not also manifest on all other levels, every misconception, every distortion and imbalance of the will functioning, and every refusal to feel what is there, inevitably also creates a physical manifestation or bodily condition. It therefore hampers not only the person's spiritual unfoldment, but equally his physical life experience. It is therefore utterly false to assume that the physical and the spiritual life stand in opposition. One is merely an expression of the other. The physical body expresses conceptual error, will-imbalance, and stagnant, denied feelings by muscular blocks. The tensions and energy stagnation caused by distortions on any of the other levels can affect the body by distorting it, by creating all sorts of symptoms and, when neglected long enough, physical illness.

Needless to say, the physical level must, again, be approached in a different way. As you do on this path, the blocks must be helped to be eliminated also from the outer level; the energy must be set in motion again; the physical feelings must be connected with the soul movements, the inner attitudes, the content of the mind. Where energy is blocked, consciousness cannot penetrate. Every cell in the human body is conscious -- a consciousness unto itself. When areas are blocked off in the body, the cell system in these areas is prevented from being permeated with the divine energy stream and the divine consciousness. As I have often said, the whole universe consists of energy and consciousness. Creation is an ongoing process of a happy fusion between energy and consciousness. They interact.

Effective pathwork takes place on all these levels and with all these approaches. As I said, there is no outer rule that can determine when to change from one into the other. It is different with everyone. The path must be allowed to express itself from within, as a living, organismic reality. All the various avenues offered on this path fulfill important functions in order to work on one or the other of these levels.

It is necessary to again and again and again attempt getting in touch with the higher self, the divine consciousness that is ever present, immutable, and immediately available within you. When this is done for the purpose of making distorted levels of soul substance conscious and re-orienting them so as to unify all split off soul substance, meditation takes of course a different road from the kind of meditation that is used for the sole purpose of realizing the divine self while disregarding the dark aspects of the self. It is a current illusion and wishful thinking that this latter approach automatically deals with the dark side of human nature. This cannot be so. You cannot overcome what you have not consciously and fully experienced. This wishful hope with which you are all familiar is nourished by the fact that it is indeed possible to realize the already potentially present part of the Godself. It is very important, my friends, to clearly understand this. This is why it is often true that entities who have led a difficult and apparently unspiritual life while in the body, after having shed the body have done more toward the universal process of evolution than some others who have led an extremely spiritual life, who may even have been so-called Masters, but who have cultivated their beauty and disregarded their ugliness. They have thus failed to unify and so have unwittingly perpetuated the dualistic state of consciousness in which this earth finds itself.

Since our path deals with the harder of the two roads, it is obvious that our approach to meditation is different. I will give a special lecture next time which is a résumé, or a summary, of what I have given you over the years in regard to the various necessary approaches to meditation for this particular path. For, as you know, approaches to mediation can be as varied as the human personality, as life experience. Meditation is too vast a subject to include in this summary. Like this one, the next lecture will also help you further on your path, by showing in concise outline certain basic precepts and fundamental rules.

Many human beings, no matter how committed to this path, are not always capable of meditating; for the very blocks of mind, of the will, of the feelings, and of the body also create a spiritual block, so that meditation cannot be practiced. Again, you must grope and seek to unblock a little here and a little there through deep insight, through a search for recognition, through a summoning of honest courage and letting yourself feel what is in you. Through such endeavor, the block to meditation will also loosen up. You can then meditate for further guidance to unblock more, to become more conscious of what is still hidden, to experience more feelings. You have to release blocks in order to meditate, and you must meditate in order to release blocks. At times, a person starts the path without any meditation whatever, for his consciousness may block off this very approach. When sufficient unblocking is done, when false spirituality is sufficiently cleared up, then a new influx of spiritual energy and consciousness can take place, and every effort becomes easier. A spiritual block can exist by either adopting a false, escaping, separating spirituality, or by negating the greater reality altogether. In both instances, misconceptions must be eliminated in order to free the channel for the real spiritual influx. Often real spirituality is rejected by wanting to reject the false, escapist spirituality, and confusing the two.

When the blocks to spiritual influx begin to be eliminated, the whole process can be speeded up -- the process of awareness, liberation, healing, and unification. For, on each step of the way, you can avail yourself of this immeasurably powerful tool: your contact with your divine reality. I will, as I said, discuss in the next lecture some of the laws pertaining to meditation so as to help you further although I have of course discussed this topic, scattered here and there, in the past. The time has come to bring it all together into one comprehensive whole.

Just as the mind level can be conscious or unconscious, so can be the will, the feeling, and even the body level. It is therefore imperative that the degree of consciousness be increased on all levels; that you connect, for example, a physical symptom (a pain or a tension) with the mental attitude, the thought, emotion, and the will that correspond and motivate the specific physical manifestation. For instance, when you begin to sense that a specific bodily tension is a feeling of hate and rage, is an overactive outer will that is prevented from hitting out, is a specified misconception, then you unify all levels and increase your scope of consciousness on all levels.

It is one of the immutable spiritual laws that lack of awareness of one area prohibits awareness of another. So, for example, if you manage to stave off awareness of your lower self and your mask self, you will not be aware of the already manifest higher self. You may pay lip service to the fact that you must be an expression of a higher, divine consciousness, but you cannot possibly feel it unless you make yourself feel your lower self and the mask that hides it. Thus, how can you possibly meditate and address an aspect of the divine in you? In the slow progression of such a pathwork, it will come to pass that, at times, you may be conscious of your divine heritage; at other times you will be totally oblivious, cut off from it.

Just as both the higher and the lower self can be conscious or unconscious or at any degree between these two states, so can the mask self. The mask self is the pretense, the hiding, the facade you present to the world, the idealized self image you want to be and invest your energies into so as to make it "real." All of these various expressions indicate the mask self. The mask self is a defense against exposing who you really are at this point in time -- although you are not, of course, exclusively the lower self, which it is the purpose of the mask to hide. However, by masking anything of yourself, you inevitably also mask your higher self from yourself. The more you try to show only your good side -- what is genuinely there in the higher self, but not in the mask self -- the more your higher self is masked. Again, you can be conscious of this or not. At times, you may be acutely aware of your faking, your falsifying yourself -- and this is so much more preferable to the unaware state. At other times, because you have identified so much with your mask, you are oblivious of wearing one. When you are unaware of your mask, you feel ashamed and uncomfortable, but you don't face this fact because you don't wish to experience and deal with such feelings. Thus a further process of splitting off sets in, in which you lose track more and more of who you really are. This is the state of lostness that many individuals wish to cure by some magic -- drugs, pills, formulas -- even meditation. They also turn to therapies that encourage the helpless state of sickness and overlook the potent factor of will that must be used if rightly understood and applied.

This is why the path is, above anything else, a process of making things conscious. This self-awareness unifies you, unifies the split in you, unifies conflicts in you, and establishes your sense of self and your knowledge that the universe with all its bliss is yours.

A very important aspect of this work is yet another level of self, beyond the physical body. The reason that I failed to include it in our enumeration of levels is that this is generally not recognized as a level of human personality in human thinking. This is the level of life experience. Generally, life experience is perceived as a separate "entity" as it were, as if the human entity were put into a fixed life. It is overlooked that every person's life experience is as intrinsic an expression of his inner being as his body is. And it is only recently that a few advanced thinkers begin to see the body as such a connected expression of the whole person. There are still many who view man's body manifestation as being almost as much unconnected from his inner life as his life experience. In reality, the life experience is totally symptomatic and conclusive of the inner state of the manifest personality. Our path uses this most important tool and truth in order to determine the inner state.

This more truthful and comprehensive vision does away with the fallacy of man's helplessness. The truth leads to man's assuming self-responsibility in every conceivable respect. Most human beings are loath to accept this. They had rather see themselves as helpless, innocent victims with all the suffering and hopelessness that go with it than accept the hope, light, and freedom of self-responsibility. This indicates the emotional immaturity of mankind as a whole. It also indicates the sense of guilt that is attached to admitting fallacy and distortion. Paradoxical as it may seem, the more helpless you pretend to be vis-a-vis your life experience, the less an inner, healthy, relaxed will functions; the stronger the tight self-will of the little, ineffective ego becomes in order to ward off the imagined "unjust" life experience. What a waste of valuable energy!

It is an intrinsic aspect of this work that you eventually shed the illusion of your being an innocent victim and avail yourself of the key to freedom -- which is self-responsibility. This is not a postulate or a philosophy that cannot be verified. Anyone who goes into this work honestly and deeply enough must inevitably find out that the good and the bad life experience -- both -- are exact expressions of his thinking, his willing, his feeling, of his physical being.

There are many other aspects of the pathwork important to understand, but they are the details that help fill out these fundamental principles. They are, as I said, being given in past and future lectures and answers to questions.

Try to absorb and use what I gave you tonight. It will help you to know where you are going and that what you may be unwilling to experience is universal, necessary, and not at all unacceptable. It will also make you more aware of the inner rhythm and reality that is the path. Whoever commits himself to the path will experience that there is a living, organic reality in the path. It manifests, instructs, and shows you that whatever you experience has a meaning for you. The difficulty is that at times man does not want to listen to it. He wants to tune out; he wants to go with his self-will and give in to his own ideas which often camouflage his fear of meeting himself head-on. He may then seek out various ways where it is easy to camouflage. When that happens, the voice of the path can no longer be discerned. That is why it should at all times be cultivated. Then this voice will speak louder and clearer, as you ask it. Ask it with a truly open attitude, an attitude that is willing to listen to a consciousness that is you, and yet it is greater than your conscious you. Then you will see that this greater you is real and the little consciousness is only a separated particle. When this begins to happen, unification is beginning to set in.

Be blessed, my dear ones, all of you. Know that the love and truth of the universe are your ultimate goal, your ultimate fate that nothing in the world can alter even if the little mind is uselessly and stubbornly afraid of the process. Be blessed, go in peace into this year's work, with joy, for the universe holds such rich fulfillment for everyone. These are not empty words. The truth of these words will make itself known when you first fully face the opposite -- your unhappiness, your suffering, your distortions. As you do so, the truth of your ultimate fate will become your reality.
