

PSYCHIC NUCLEAR POINTS

Greetings, my most beloved friends. Blessings for all of you here. The divine power of love flows forth into you, toward you, through you. Be receptors and let yourself be enriched in all your being by this gift. Tonight's lecture is a particularly joyful one for me to give. In the realm I live in, it has been prepared for a long time, in your terms. It needed quite a bit of preparation -- preparation on your part to be truly ready for absorbing it, but also preparation for us adjusting the terms for the concepts of your human understanding and language. They need to be squeezed into this narrow box. This indeed needs a great deal of work. It is not an easy task, for we are dealing here with ideas and verities and concepts and principles for which the human language has no room. You can thus well imagine that it is not easy to find a way to make these ideas, at least in a tiny part, accessible.

This lecture deals primarily with the creative process in the universe, in the cosmos. Since, however, I do not give lectures for the purpose of handing out information about generalities -- no matter how lofty these spiritual facts and truths may be -- they must always be directly connected with something that you can use practically in the here and now. There is no metaphysical truth or fact that cannot find immediate application for the task of living, wherever you are in your present state of development. At the beginning, this lecture will deal with general aspects and concepts. You will then see how you can make use of them in a very personal way. Now let us begin.

Creation requires the meeting of two essential principles in the universe. I discussed this before. It is what you, in your human terminology, may best call the masculine and feminine principles. As I told you, they permeate all of creation. Nothing can ever exist and be created without these forces coming together. They are the active and receptive principles. These two principles are aspects of one whole. Positive creation requires that these two principles meet in a very harmonious and flexible and mutually enhancing way. In any kind of negative creation, these two principles meet in a clash, in a mutually exclusive way. But the principles remain the same.

You must realize, my friends, that what I say to you is highly simplified. In this highly simplified way, it cannot even remotely do justice to reality. But to whatever degree this is possible, I shall try to bring into human language and convey some of the great truths that permeate all of life.

When these two principles meet and interact -- whether this happens in a constructive or in a destructive way -- the forces of their meeting are tremendous. They come together in a very highly concentrated form and converge into a single point. We might call these points psychic nuclear points. They are "nuclear" in the sense that they are a "nucleus," a basic, fundamental concentrate so highly charged with creative matter that a self-perpetuating chain reaction of immense intensity inexorably follows suit. These points form the underlying principle of every created form, manifestation, object, organism, or whatever.

They are "psychic" in the sense that they are non-material in nature and that they are essentially an emission of consciousness, of planning and thinking mind stuff. They are not visible or discernible on the three-dimensional plane. But they are perceivable on the three-dimensional plane by inference, by intuition, and even by logical deduction if that logical deduction is carried far enough. Also, they can be said to be psychic (not in the sense of occult or mysterious "psychic phenomena") in the sense of consciousness manifestations. No creation of anything can take place unless a conscious deliberate attitude, intent, thinking, and planning is somewhere imbedded in the force that is brought forth. I have often said that the universe consists of consciousness and energy. Yet even while I say this, it is misleading because it suggests that these are two separate factors. They are not separate factors. They are only two separate factors from the point of view of limited human perception. In principle they are one. Consciousness cannot exist without it being energy at the same time. Every thought is highly charged energy. And energy cannot be anything else but an expression of consciousness. One cannot really exist without the other. Consciousness sends forth energy through its thought processes, through its intention, through its attitude toward all that is in the universe, toward life itself, toward that which is being created.

Nothing can be created without planning, without intention, without purpose, without a thought somewhere "behind" it all. The psychic nuclear points are really a sequence of psychic events. They cannot just be one point, one psychic event. One thought leads to another in a series of logical sequences. The series of thoughts lead to actions and reactions, to newly born facts which in turn lead to new facts. These facts form a series of interacting, interdependent chain reactors. Just try to visualize: one thought brings a certain result. That result brings forth an attitude and a feeling. That attitude and that feeling bring forth an action. That action brings forth a reaction. That reaction brings forth another reaction, and so on and so forth.

These chain reactions are cyclic, they are circular. They are highly charged, and instead of diminishing when the chain reactions compound, they become stronger and stronger. They are self-perpetuating, self-feeding, self-augmenting in ever increasing speed and momentum. I might say that they are self-revolving in an every increasing swirl of charged energy. When the momentum has reached its highest charge, an explosion follows which is the culminating point of the specific creation. The creation has now taken form. A new movement of psychic chain reactions follows with the recharge. I will say more about this later. The momentum increases in a spiral movement that goes faster, faster, faster until the force converges into one point so infinitesimal that there seems to exist no smaller measure. But that which appears as one point still consists of the many forces, forms, and thought material that went into the chain of psychic events of that particular creation, even on that minuscule "measure."

I have to use terms like "measure," "size," "time," etc., which are aspects of the state of consciousness the human race has attained, but which really no longer hold true when we speak of such matters as I discuss in this lecture. Adequate terms simply do not exist for many of the concepts I present here. So much of what I say may be misleading if not understood intuitively and perhaps symbolically. Big and small are really not matters of size. They are in reality exclusive designations to indicate the significance of the creative aspect in question. If the thought that brings forth a new creation is, for example, very strong, unified, purposeful in terms of the creative plan of evolution; if there are no countercurrents because the thought is in accordance with all universal laws, then the psychic nuclear point will be "large," that is, powerful, durable, of long lasting impact.

The charge and recharge of the ever evolving cyclic movements, explosions, new creation will be an apparently endless chain.

If the thought starting the new chain of events culminating into a psychic nuclear point is insignificant; if the thought is fraught with erroneous assumptions and therefore never one-pointed, always countermanded by an opposite force, the intensity must be less. Even if it seems powerful when seen out of context, its durability and lasting impact must be limited.

Psychic nuclear points exist throughout the entire universe. They can be found in the most simple, uncomplex creation to the most differentiated, complex, intricate systems imaginable. The variables are indeed infinite. There is no particle of air or ether that is not such a nuclear point. They exist in the air you breathe and live and move in. The nuclear points that are non-material have their importance for non-material existence. But they are just as important as materialized psychic nuclear points, for they certainly affect you in that your own being is also non-material. You relate to, are affected by, and create non-material nuclear points whether you are aware of this or not.

There are also materialized psychic nuclear points. Although they are materialized, you cannot measure, see, or discern them with your human instruments at this time. As I said before, they can be deduced, but they cannot be seen or measured. This, however, does not mean that they do not have material existence. Every cell is a creation or a materialization of psychic nuclear points, intact with all the chain reactions, charge and recharge culminating in an explosion, new creation, and reformulation of the cyclic movement. Every leaf is a complex interaction of many nuclear points. A gust of wind is a series of psychic nuclear points. The breath you breathe is the same -- not to mention a whole organism, consisting of bones, muscles, flesh, organs, skin, tissue. They form an infinitely complicated system of intricately connected psychic nuclear points.

The life that you create for yourself, the philosophy of life that underlies this creation, the very situation you find yourself in at this particular instant -- they all are even more complicated systems of many convergent and sometimes contradictory or mutually exclusive, as well as mutually enhancing, psychic nuclear points. Every instant of living is an end result of many thoughts, intentions, actions, feelings, attitudes, expressed traits of a long previous history. (Of course, each of these thoughts, intentions, etc., are in themselves sometimes more and sometimes less complicated systems of psychic nuclear points. They all form together that one point that is your life at this moment.) The moment now is a "psychic explosion" which is the end result of millennia to the last half hour you have lived, to actually the very thought you finish thinking this minute. After this explosion, the pieces fall again into place. They reform either the same pattern of chain reactions or a new one according to the turn the consciousness takes.

At the same time, the psychic nuclear point that is the end result of all this past history in the fractional now is already the preparation for the next minute, and the ensuing events of chain reactions in the next half hour, the next day, the next month, the next year, the next decades and centuries. But since mind can always be changed, (and is often being changed), enhanced, is in a growing state, has infinite possibilities for infinite changes at all times, negative creation can be altered. An important aspect of this pathwork is that you discover and become aware of the individual chain of events you have created; that you discover highly charged energy and vitality that is self-perpetuating, has found its own life, as it were. You learn how to change a course that is unsatisfactory to you because it leads to an inorganic and futile life experience.

I have discussed for quite a few years the principle of benign and vicious circles of human attitudes. Now, this is only a very limited aspect of the principle I explain here. It is highly oversimplified and sheds light on the process only in the barest and most sketchy way. But you who are involved in this pathwork have found that wherever you discover a vicious circle within your psychic system, apparently, to all intents and purposes, you are caught in it. Caught, that is, unless and until you are aware of its existence and find what I call the "breaking point" where you reverse the vicious circle into a benign circle by the specific attitude that sets the circle in motion.

When mankind finds itself in the illusion of being helpless, it has lost touch with the intentionality that has created the specific situation, i.e., the materialization of a psychic nuclear point. It cannot be emphasized enough that the ongoing momentum and the ever growing force of each psychic nuclear point (whether it is a positive or a negative creation) is the result of thought and intentionality.

Now we will speak about another aspect of this phenomenon. And that is what I briefly referred to before: augmentation. One might suppose that an energy current set in motion will after a while exhaust itself. In the matter of creative forces, this is never the case. Instead of diminishing force and momentum, force and momentum become stronger. So do the attitudes responsible for the creation. Even a weak, negative, contradictory psychic nuclear point works according to this principle of augmentation. It, too, perpetuates itself in ever increasing momentum until the point of explosion is being reached. In this case, however, the explosion may be of weaker impact, the points of culmination reached sooner with less force gathered. But within the framework of its own inner life cycle, the nuclear point must augment itself.

The more you love, the more there will be love in you, coming to you, recreating more strongly your flow and capacity of loving in an ever increasing cycle, more and more, ad infinitum. This is why it is such a misconception to believe that if you love one person, you cannot love others, that you have less to give to others or, for that matter, to yourself. You must have more because the momentum of the intense charge creates more of the same and more of the same in ever increasing measure -- as much as your consciousness goes with it and does not set up a counter-attitude creating a contradictory force.

The same applies to anything else. It may be knowledge. It may be a negative intent. It may be emphasis on a specific talent and life expression. It may be a specific attitude, according to truth or error, in regard to life. Whatever it is, it breeds more of the same unless you wish to halt and reverse the process.

Now, as I mentioned, each psychic nuclear point in its ever increasing momentum comes to its own inner explosion or breaking point. That has nothing to do with the breaking point I mentioned in connection with the vicious circles. The latter is a deliberately sought measure to reverse negative creation. It often requires much effort to look for and find the specific breaking point and even more effort to follow through the decision to break the cycle there. But the explosion or breaking point I mention here is an inexorable phenomenon that happens constantly. It is really the culminating point where a creation appears, manifests, materializes. (It may materialize itself on the psychic planes, not necessarily on the earth plane.) It is a climax, a creative orgasm in the universal process. The explosions are the final manifestations that create the events. Again, they may even be a life situation, a work of art, a human organism, a musical tone that reaches the ear, a new attitude toward life. Once the explosion has taken place -- according to the attitude, intent, thought, volition responsible for the creation -- it may have reached its final explosion point as far as this particular organization is concerned. The energies released after the explosion can now be reformulated, reorganized, reoriented, can be gathered and set into a new direction. An entirely new psychic nuclear spiral can thus be started, culminating into a new nuclear point (the explosion or climax or end creation -- which is never really an end, of course, but simultaneously a new beginning of either the same or a different type of spiral configuration). The particles that swirl after the explosion then reorganize themselves into either a similar, identical, or altogether different pattern. Consciousness determines which pattern is going to be formed.

There are constantly smaller and larger explosions going on in the whole universe, in each of your cells, in your thinking process, in your feelings. Some such explosions are discernible for you, my friends. You can actually feel an energy movement in your body forming successive tiny explosions as if stars were dancing in your system. But for the most part, you are totally oblivious of these explosions taking place. You only notice the end creation which appears to be a fixed thing. But when you become more aware of your innermost attitudes, when you dissolve your blocks and resistances against taking stock of yourself in truth and thus become more open, more finely attuned to all that is going on in an intensely alive creation, you will also notice more, perceive more realistically some of these phenomena I now touch upon.

It is known to your scientists that whole planetary systems explode, disintegrate, and reform themselves in a different organization. The same principles hold true about everything else. If these explosions would not constantly go on in your own inner system you could not renew yourself. When you feel a flow of feelings, the tiniest organisms explode and reform themselves on the physical as well as on the psychic levels. In your life manifestations, very significant changes in your life, crises, events that are momentarily traumatic are such explosions; and reformation ensues. For example, when a vicious circle has found its final, ultimate absurdity and can no longer function and when the human consciousness stubbornly refuses to heed the signs and deliberately fails to find the breaking point, the situation explodes into a crisis. Sometimes physical death is such a phenomenon. Not always, though. Physical death can also be a very harmonious, organic, and creative process, depending on the circumstances. But the total change of an ultimate explosion is always a renewal even if the mind stubbornly refuses to understand. Many explosions and reformations of the same vicious circles must ultimately come to the final point of absurdity where they can no longer function in that same form. This manifests on the level of conscious experience as great crisis. That then can be the opportunity for the consciousness responsible for this manifestation to actively seek, grope for, struggle to attain the necessary awareness and understanding of the meaning of what has come to pass and thus be responsible for reformation of the creative energies.

The explosion is always a climax, but since nothing in creation is ever final or finite, the released energies of each such climax compound and form new spiral organizations, new psychic nuclear points, new creations. That which has not taken form emits the inherent energies to create and to further fill the void with the glory of divine life and consciousness. The charge is endless, just as creation is endless. The charge can only be diminished when you fear it, doubt it, and when you counteract it with preposterous, nonsensical thought material. But even then, the charge is never really diminished, for this is impossible. It is only held in abeyance and momentarily prevented from manifesting, but it gathers "behind the scene," as it were, to be at man's disposal when he seeks the charge.

It is your task to find out where you prohibit the charge of creative influx and how you thus diminish your life. You must find this out with that part of your thinking that is capable of this observation; capable of the observation that the thinking behind your negative creation is absurd; capable of noting that such thinking is not inconsequential, as you often would want to believe, but rather that it leads to action and creation and is therefore of great consequence. You must use that part of your mind that is capable of pinpointing the whole absurdity of this particular creation, of comparing it with its corresponding truth and, consequently, of formulating the strong intent to use the same energetic power to shift the emphasis into a truthful channel. Thus you have the whole power of the energy forces, not diminished, but augmented in a positive sense.

Now I will come to a very specific aspect you are dealing with yourself in relation to what I just said. This applies to your practical life right here and now. When you find part of yourself deadened and numbed and are frightened of reviving it, you find yourself in the following position: psychic nuclear points in your system, going into a negative direction, have become frightening. Yet you had not in the past possessed a conscious mind strong and intelligent enough to take note of this fact and to distinguish and discriminate. Thus you seemed to have been faced with the alternatives to either express your full energy flow and thus act out often quite extreme destructiveness or to numb and deaden these forces in order to be protected from the energies that seem to flow only into negative expressions. This is a very common predicament at a certain point in the individual's development. For example, you may feel a rush of intense energy when you are angry, destructive, enraged -- a flow that you simply never feel in a positive state. Many of you have learned to express these negative attitudes in a harmless way. You take responsibility for them and give vent to them in a framework where no one gets hurt by these expressions. But you feel stumped because you fear the further release and prefer to be in a numb state rather than destroy. At this point you have not yet discovered that there is a choice. You are frightened of the momentum of the explosion and the charge that is being created by the underlying negative attitude of this particular creation. Thus you slow down the process, as it were. And now you are reviving the process, as you should. But it cannot suffice that you merely revive your energies, without understanding the consciousness behind the numbness and deadness, the consciousness that issues forth a negative intent.

It is important, also, that you completely comprehend how the negative intent is based on a false idea, a false universal idea. It is only when you have that specific understanding that you will dare to revive the energies, the energy charge that lives constantly in every particle of your being -- in your spiritual and your material being. You will then come to dare to allow the charge to flow forth.

You have found in the course of this pathwork the following phases (this is oversimplified now). First is the search for your conscious and unconscious negativities. Second is the total admission and owning up to them in the spirit of truthfulness, without denial, without annihilating yourself and believing yourself as only that part. Third is by seeing the false ideas and the false concept imbedded in the negative attitude. That must be very clearly formulated and articulated in your consciousness. I might say that some of you still battle in this phase. Of course, the phases often overlap. They are not sequential in exactly that order. This is just an overall view. And last is the change of intent: the attitude that clearly formulates the commitment from the negative to the positive. You are increasingly working in this way now in your meditation groups at your Center. This is valuable work that is largely responsible for the exhilarating movement, expansion, and growth, individually and in your group as a whole.

In the course of these stages, my friends, you have often found peculiar resistances. You have found (contrary to your intellectual understanding, illogically as it may seem) that you are very reluctant to really want to energize the numbed matter in you. The reason for this reluctance is that it is not quite clear in your consciousness what the negative nuclear point is; what the various psychic events are in this nuclear point; what the specific false idea is. How is it false? What is the right idea? Only when you know, can you wholeheartedly state the positive intent. As long as this is not clarified, there must be fear that when the energy moves forth in its negative chain, it will culminate in its commensurate creation and explosion. Therefore, you prefer to keep yourself numb and deadened.

I am not talking about whether such deadening is advisable or not, good or bad. I am not making a generalized judgment. There are stages in life where the temporary numbing fulfills its purpose and function until the soul is sufficiently aware and strengthened, the consciousness sufficiently raised so that the energies can be activated again, now in a positive, creative way. There are other stages where even the negative explosions and crises are inevitable and serve a very important purpose for the growth of the soul. In such phases the persistent holding of the energies is needless procrastination and waste. No rule can be made. Each situation is entirely different. There is an inner mechanism at work that is directed by the inner, real, divine self. Only the fearful, separated, fragmented, and stubborn mind can halt the process and clog up the channel to the divine self. So beware of stubbornness, my friends. For stubbornness is a wall that shuts out the divine inner guidance.

The understanding of this material, even in its barest, most oversimplified form, as I could give it here, should help you to raise your consciousness, to pinpoint your attention, to intuitively perceive these creative processes at work in all that exists, in all that you are. It will therefore make it much easier for you to continue dealing with yourself on your path.

The acceleration of your pathwork is a tremendously joyful reality. It will create forever more joy, peace, excitement, and fulfillment in your life until you will fully know that it is safe to live in a state of charge when the charge is positive. Be blessed in the world of love that surrounds and permeates you. This is the only unalterable reality that ever exists. Be blessed.
