

CHANGE FROM OUTER TO INNER LAWS IN THE NEW AGE

Greetings, my very beloved friends here. Blessings for every one of you. Divine love reaches out for you, seeps deep into your heart, and embraces you. Let it give you the peace that is the ultimate reality, that you can and will find within your innermost being if you go all the way with yourself.

My dearest friends, in tonight's lecture I wish to give you another vision about the growth process in which you as individuals and the planet as a whole are involved. Every seed contains the plan of its ultimate fulfillment, potentiality, and final self-evolution. This plan is always inherent in the seed and follows its own organic way. You have experienced some of this phenomenon in your pathwork. You have seen again and again that there is an organic process that unfolds completely independently from your mind, from your conscious expectations and thinking. This plan fulfills itself in certain stages. Whenever new stages are being reached, new energies are being released.

Now let us look at this phenomenon on the most superficial, material level of manifestation. Let us take the outer growth of a human being. You can see very distinct phases in the growth of a human being. When the infant reaches a certain point of readiness to unfold dormant capacities -- at first, to learn how to speak and walk -- new energies must be made available. Otherwise this unfoldment cannot take place. This is the first major phase of change after incarnation on the physical level. The next major phase of expansion is when the child is ready to leave home and go to school. This is of course not only a physical expansion, but along with it there is inner expansion. It is a step out into the world. He unfolds inherent potentialities to cope with others outside the home. These phases of growth and expansion continue throughout the entire life span.

When full physical growth is being reached, these phases are not as noticeable as during childhood. However, they are just as distinct and just as real. These phases always mean change, growth, reaching out, reaching higher levels of creative self-expression both in dealing with the world and in organization within the inner system. On the physical level, it is even known by your physicians that every few years after definitive segments of what you call time, changes occur in the cellular system. Actually the chemical components totally change in the outer structure although, again, this is not noticeable, but it is nevertheless a process that is very real.

The same stages of growth and change exist of course even more dynamically on the mental, emotional, and spiritual levels, on the psychic level, on the level of the inner being. Each stage is an orderly step toward the fulfillment of the seed plan. The seed plan releases automatically new energies. When the entity follows its plan, these energies become extremely beneficial. They aid the process of growth, of change, of expansion, of reaching into new dimensions from within, moving outward, and embracing more of reality. That reality is of course an inner reality whose aim it is to transform outer reality according to its own perfection and limitless beauty and possibilities of expression.

However, when the movement is being stopped, when the outer consciousness resists the process, makes itself insensitive to it, and thus ignores its urgings, then the energies are not allowed to unfold in their intrinsically harmonious way, then the constructive power of these energies turns destructive, though destructive only in the light of limited human vision. Actually the destruction is always aimed to eliminate the obstructions, the untruth, the infringements on divine unfoldment. The blockages the consciousness sets in the way of the released energies need to be dissolved, and this manifests in the life of the person as upheaval, crisis, painful destruction. The individual needs to learn how to see and understand these happenings. They are not haphazard events.

Whenever the consciousness is open, is in truth, is positive, is according to divine law, the energies are moving organically and harmoniously. Wherever the consciousness is contrary to truth, to divine reality, to divine law, the energies are being inverted and turn, apparently, against the self at this period.

Now, this is a process that embraces all being, all creation. What applies to the individual entity, applies just as much to the planet. I often mentioned that the planet earth is an entity and the same laws of growth, the same stages and phases and periods of unfoldment apply to it as to the individual. With the individual entity as well as with the planetary entity, each period of expansion is quite distinct. The energies that need to be released in order to make the expansion inherent in the seed plan possible must be strong. Hence the positive manifestations are extremely noticeable. Changes, palpable unfoldments of new potentials, renewed creativity, new approaches to self and others that reveal a much greater maturity, increased well-being and bliss, increased vision of new alternatives for self-expression are the manifestations when these energies are utilized according to plan. Crisis and destruction are the manifestations when the new energies are not recognized as an influx of divine forces and are therefore resisted as if they were a hostile force. All regressive and reactionary attitudes, as well as radical revolutionary ones, are nothing but such blockages. The latter is a blockage no less than the former, being merely an outward projection of what is held back within, with the emphasis misdirected.

How does this apply to the present new influx of the unfolding Christ consciousness in this new age -- which is one of those stages of expansion I have just discussed? If an individual is ready to reach adulthood but blocks it, the adult energies being released in the psychic, emotional, and physical system will create a crisis. This phenomenon is vastly ignored among your scientists and educators, even among your psychologists. As I said, the same is true about the planetary entity. Your planet is ready for adulthood and strives toward unfolding it. Yet the planet also harbors resistant elements that want to ignore the process, that fear and resist it. You can recognize factions of people who are totally oblivious of inner processes. You can also see the factions, the groups of people who sense some of these processes. And then there are those who are very keenly aware of the inner reality and see the outer reality for exactly what it is: merely a reflection, a manifestation.

The lower organization of consciousness that is focused only on the outer manifestation is in a state of separateness. It is unable to perceive the oneness of all being, and therefore it proceeds in ways that split off the self from the others. Selfishness, greed, ruthlessness, unconcern, and cruelty are manifestations of this turn of mind. Since the precepts behind these attitudes are based on illusion, they must ultimately prove painful and unworkable and are being destroyed by every new influx of divine energy. This is not always understood in its true significance. It often requires a great deal of what you call time and a great deal of development before the inner meaning of such crisis can become clear. The blindness that is unable to perceive the oneness of all being is distinctive. It is based on the apparent diversity of interests between self and others. The personality thus involved can see no further than the immediate point and neglects, nay, refuses, to see beyond this point. It remains unaware of the connecting links.

The lesson to learn in the age that mankind has just left behind, which we can call the early adolescent stage of planetary consciousness, was to make a very crude kind of distinction between good and evil, between social and anti-social behavior, between constructive and destructive acts. This was a totally dualistic state, inevitable, since the consciousness of the planet was not able to perceive beyond dualism. It was also a necessary preparation for the next state, the one into which you have entered now. You have to acquire the strength of character to withstand temptation before you can realize that nothing is being sacrificed by growing up, because your real interest cannot ever be different from that of others.

In previous ages this distinction could not be made. Mankind was incapable of distinguishing between good and evil, between what is furthering and building up and what is destructive for others even if it seems advantageous to the self. At those earlier periods, man was merely governed by impulse and by desire. What was immediately gratifying seemed "good," and no consideration could be given to anything beyond it. Consciousness was then in its infant stage. Only in the age that has now come to an end could the struggle be taken up to choose between what seemed divergent interests. The pain created by the blindness of the undeveloped state becomes its own medicine and lesson. I often mentioned this divine law which is so hard for humanity to recognize. If a man gives up what seems his interest because he recognizes that in not doing so he would bring harm to others, he prepares for the following stage of development when he can see the fuller vision. This also applies to the planet as a whole.

The dualistic way of seeing reality is still very deeply imbedded in the human consciousness. And when the focus of consciousness is deeply imbedded in this perception, then indeed everything experienced seems to be a question of either the self or the other, and the conflicts of conscience that result from this vision are often quite severe. Needless to say, all human beings cannot always make that apparent sacrifice in order to preserve or establish decency, fairness, kindness, constructive behavior because such action is so deeply experienced as being against the self. Therefore when man is sacrificing from a dualistic consciousness, he does so often to his detriment. Such sacrifice is illusion, not divine love, kindness, and fairness, not decency and honesty. But if these attributes seem to extract severe sacrifice, sacrifice must be experienced. For you shall experience as you believe. You have all experienced in your purification process how resentful and deprived you feel when you refrain from destructive behavior; and also how guilty and self-rejecting you feel when you give in to the temptation of following the call of the immediate desire of the lower self.

The laws and mores of civilization in the age just past are hinged on this basic duality, thus on an expression of limited vision of reality. At the same time, this limited vision was a much needed testing ground. All the manifestations of strife and upheaval, natural as well as man-made, were an expression of this conflict between the seemingly divergent interests of the self and others. Now this age has come to an end. Those who have sacrificed for the good of all, for the sake of a divine principle, will find that this is no longer necessary, that a deeper level of truth can be reached. For you now see that what harms the self harms others and what harms others also harms the self. Those who have acted primarily on the selfish and destructive level must come to a change of heart if the powerful energies that are being released on the inner plane of the planet are to be creative and furthersome for them. Otherwise they will create unbearable tensions that must culminate in crisis.

The planet earth has come to a stage of development in which the old structure can no longer be maintained. It cannot bear the tensions and restrictions of the old limited consciousness. A new vision must be gained where all is one, where the self and others are perceived as one. You have to look for this new vision beneath the limited vision to which the immediate consciousness is so accustomed. This new vision brings enormous peace, security, joy, self-expression. This is not an illusory image of wishful thinking I present here. It is stark reality.

You all know, my friends, that the distinction between people who are still steeped in the old consciousness and those who are in the new perception is not always simple. For man is not cut of one piece. There are many human beings who are on the brink, who need help and guidance to pull them over into the new. Even those who are by and large ready to let the new consciousness express itself through them, whose personality is already in the new Christ consciousness, find areas within where the old, the selfish, narrow vision is still maintained. Those are the areas you call your "problems." Perhaps we can now see this in a different light, in a more comprehensive light. It is too simple to say that these are "problems." They express a rhythm of growth and expansion.

As I also said repeatedly, there are those who are already prepared for this new age of consciousness, and in this sense this consciousness already exists. They are the pioneers. They create a new civilization. The beginnings have already been made in various places all over the earth. There also exist quite a considerable number of human beings who are not quite yet in the new consciousness but are capable of reaching that state. This requires very intense work with guidance. The way to do this work is being presented to you through this channel. More of this work of preparation is needed all over the world. And it will come. Your task is very important, for you are not merely concerned with those human beings who have attained the new consciousness, who are pioneers in creating a new civilization. You are also called upon to undergo your own purification work, your own growth process so that your inner vision will be enlarged and your present state of manifest consciousness will alter according to the potentiality inherent in your seed plan. Then you can help others in many, many different forms to accomplish the same. There need not be this very strict differentiation between those who are in the old and those who are in the new. There are a number of human beings of whom it can truly be said that, at this stage of their development, they are not ready to make the step, to undergo the necessary discipline of the work. But there are more than you realize of those who might be able to do it, but unfortunately do not do so. There are also many human beings who can and are willing to undertake the necessary steps to widen and deepen their consciousness according to their potential plan.

This work is not sufficiently spread on the earth plane, and it needs more emphasis. This will happen. Your own nucleus here can and will play an important role in this task, in exchanges with other new age centers which are willing to accept the process of becoming and do not just let everyone be wherever he is. Work needs to be done. This work of preparing more and more individuals in their inner consciousness for the inner reality to unfold really means very plainly just one thing: it means liberating God within you, liberating God within the general consciousness of man.

The God consciousness that existed in previous ages was always projected outward, as you well know. Then, as a necessary preparation, the pendulum had to swing into emphasis on the self. The individual had to give up God outside so as to fully assume responsibility for the self. But before finding God inside -- to make the transition from God outside to God inside, to bridge that gap in time and space as you know it -- a period of atheism or agnosticism had to come as a transitory state that prepared the individual for full autonomy and selfhood. This had to happen first only on the outer levels; for full autonomy and selfhood on all levels can of course exist only when God is liberated within and when your oneness with God has been found. That is reality.

Now, my friends, where the planet earth resists the powerful energies and does not follow its seed plan, its development has to proceed in different ways from those aspects of the planetary consciousness that are ready to embrace the new. This division is necessary, organic, and inevitable. Those individuals who are blind to the meaning of the crisis that arose as a result of obstructing the movement will experience it as if they were victims and as if everything were hopeless. But those in the know are aware of the real meaning of the crisis and do not fear it. They know it is a change that may, at the moment, present some difficulties in the process of adjusting to new modalities, but they also know that this means welcome liberation and greater joy.

It is exactly the same within the individual. You here, on the path, in your own personal life find out incontrovertibly, without a shadow of doubt if you are willing to really look, that each crisis you experience means a negation of truth, a violation of your divinity. And that is why you are in pain, crisis, and difficulties, and that is how you are suffering as a result of blocking an immensely powerful stream of energy and growing force. But as you gain this awareness, you also gain a wonderful weapon, a wonderful key. It is indeed a key. With that key you can open, you can see, you can recognize, and you can truly change those areas of consciousness where you have blocked and thus inverted powerful creative energies so that they have turned against you. You learn on this path to harmonize the whole process by surrendering all of you to the Christ that is awakening within you, on your inner plane of reality. Exactly the same process applies to the planet.

You who have created your Center and experience so much life and growth, pain and joy, and true peace through this process sometimes fall into the error of believing that this life you lead at these short periods you spend there is too beautiful and meaningful to be real. Reality could not be that way. It is too much, you feel. While, when you come into your ordinary surroundings, outside as it were, you designate that as the "real" life. Now, nothing could be further from the truth, my friends. What you call the real life is the most illusory life where almost everything is seen upside down and in reverse. There, only the outer, most superficial manifestations are recognized, perceived, and dealt with, and thus life is being fragmented into an unrecognizable pattern. You, in the new civilization that you are beginning to found, learn to make the connections between cause and effect, the connections between apparently fragmented pieces of experience and consciousness. You learn to discover the deeper and much more real life within that creates the outer circumstances. You thus approach reality and, at times, gain reality in a much more comprehensive manner. Once you are in possession of and connected with this reality, the real reality if I may say so, then the superficial, illusory outer reality will become much easier for you to deal with, provided you do not see it as the only reality while you consider what you pursue within yourself on your path as the unreal. In doing so, you distort truth.

And I will say to you, my friends, the new reality you discover makes you also create an outer manifestation in your Center. You already begin to see it happening. You will be the new civilization and the new culture that is slowly growing. The forces that are building this new reality are, at the same time, destroying that which obstructs this movement. For there cannot be growth and creation without also destruction. Destruction of destructiveness I have called it way back in a lecture I have given -- or destruction of that which is already obsolete and therefore needs to go but the manifest consciousness clings to it and opposes the movement. It may have had its functions in the past in a less developed state of consciousness, but to pursue it now makes no sense. You all know that from your individual work. You find within your soul substance attitudes and reactions that were very understandable and even appropriate when you were infants and small children. But you pursue them, you hold on to them as if these attitudes still had reality value. Precisely to the degree that you are doing this, you create obstructions, unhappiness, strife, frustration, crisis, and finally destruction so that the old can crumble and you can begin to rebuild.

If there is willingness to give up the old, obsolete attitude and adopt a new, more appropriate one; painful crisis and destruction are unnecessary. The change occurs most organically, harmoniously, and beautifully. Where you hold back deliberately, deny, and choose to delude yourself that it is all right, that it does not matter, or that you cannot do it, that it is too difficult, you invite inevitable crisis and pain. Exactly the same applies to all of mankind as one entity. Each individual is what an aspect or attitude is in relation to your total personality. Just as you find yourself in inner strife because part of you wants to grow and part of you wants to hold back, so it is with the planet. Parts of it want to grow, while other parts want to hold back and deny that there even exists such a conflict. There are those who want change and those who resist change.

Now, the understanding of this lecture, my friends, should help you greatly on a deeper level of your being to commit yourself to change. For change is one of the by-products of the new age. I will try to explain this now in a very specific area. Of course the same applies to many areas, but I will now choose a specific one.

Let us return for a moment to the concept of good and evil -- that which is constructive and in accordance and harmony with divine truth and law, and that which is opposed to it. The rigid law that had to exist for the primitive consciousness had to decree rules of "do's" and "don't's," commands and prohibitions. The totally childish and self-indulgent consciousness needs such rules imposed from the outside. Without it, there would have been chaos, and the most destructive impulses would have been acted out to a much greater degree than they were. But this also brought a certain rigidity and superficiality. Obeying rules blindly tempted man not to think for himself and not to struggle with the often more complex issues of inner morality. Blind obedience to rules enhanced laziness of thinking, the easy way of not taking responsibility and avoiding often necessary groping and searching that must precede true answers and enlightenment. This is why I so often stress in the guidance I give that your customary approach of one action being the right one, while the other being the wrong one is most of the time a faulty way of seeing things. I have painstakingly shown you throughout the years that most of the time either alternative could be governed by the most sincere or the most dishonest motives. Only when you sort out the dishonest ones on both sides can you open the channel to your inner God and perceive the guidance you require. This means labor, courage, search. Obeying the outer rule prevents this. So what I showed you in how to approach such questions is truly an expression of the new age consciousness that will spread much more over the planet as mankind develops.

I have also shown throughout the years in the lectures I have given how the dualistic approach creates confusion and distortion of truth in another way. There are those who claim a specific attitude to life is desirable, while its opposite is supposed to be undesirable. Others completely reverse this. Each uses the distortion, exaggeration, and fanaticism of the other as a "proof" that his side is the "correct" one. There are, for example, those who say introspection is the only way of life, while outgoingness and extroversion are harmful and erroneous. There are equally those who claim the exact opposite. Or, there are those who only believe in active expression and reject all receptive, passive attitudes, and vice versa, of course. Many other life attitudes are thus divided. Whole philosophies are based on such divisions. Painstaking treatises are written in which a lot of half-truth is being used to present one side of the matter. There are many, many such topics that undergo the same fate of rigid division, some of which I have given particular attention to throughout the years. I have shown how the dualistic either/or is a rigidity and short-sightedness that is no longer applicable. But it was an inevitable by-product of the rule system. It came from the superimposed rules which the primitive consciousness required in order not to destroy willfully, blindly, selfishly in a state of alienation from others, where the other person and his pain are not experienced as real.

I do not say that mankind has now sufficiently progressed so that outer rules are no longer necessary. Obviously this is not yet true. There are always those who would still harm others willfully and selfishly, cruelly and irresponsibly, and even do, in spite of the rules and laws from outside. But this applies only to the darkest, most undeveloped aspects of the lower self of the entity -- individual as well as planetary. To an increasing degree the rules begin to make way for an inner sense of morality and conscience, as it has never happened before. The Christ consciousness that evolves within the inner plane brings man into a state in which sooner or later, little by little, outer rules and laws will become superfluous. For the inner God will know what is truth, what is love, and what is divine reality, and the personality will act from that innermost center.

This can be seen already to a small degree. On your psychological inner path, in your emotional life, no rules are applicable -- at least no rules from outside. But on your inner path, you find the beauty of divine law that is working in utter perfection as well as benign love and justice. The child, the lower self in you, may blindly rebel against the laws, but once you want to awaken, you must be overwhelmed by the grandeur of this divine scheme in which all is well and there is nothing to fear if you choose to see it and go with it. You know your inner truth. No one else can tell it to you. No one act is right or wrong per se, on that level. Yet it is also true at certain times that your inner plan, your divine self, wishes you, needs you, to go into a certain direction and not in another. But this cannot be superimposed from the outside. Only when you go very deeply into yourself and transcend the rules, the public opinion, the facade, and then transcend the self-interest that comes from the lower self, and then transcend the need to please as well as the need to rebel and to spite, will you find the ultimate truth in regard to that particular question for which you seek guidance from your higher self. All outer help given can only show you how to go so deeply and how to recognize your investment in a false vision of reality. Those outside you can often see the maze you cannot see and can therefore help you. But the ultimate realization is of your inner law, as you find your inner God.

The new age goes in this direction. The outer law is often parallel to the inner law. Many outer laws are manifestations of divine law but have lost the dynamic connectedness with their divine origin and are therefore disconnected structures. When it comes to destructive acts of killing, stealing, or in other ways robbing others of their rights, there can be no question that the outer law is parallel to the inner law. But then we also get to more complex situations where the inner law is not that simple. This is what I am discussing now and where an approach such as you are learning can bring forth the truth and reality of the divine law on an inner level.

At times you will find that the outer law may be completely opposite to the inner law of God. On the crassest outer level of manifestation, the following is a simple and obvious example. If you happen to live in a land whose government is corrupt and requires the individual to commit acts against humanity, that is, against God, to follow the outer law would be going against divine law. It requires a great deal of courage on the part of an individual to stand up for the inner truth and deny the outer law. But man can lose himself in the maze and can take refuge in the outer law, for that may be the easier way. By the same token, man could misuse the words I am saying, he could misuse these truths in order to justify a lower self trend to defy an outer law. Again, very close inspection of the real motives and attitudes is the only true answer. There are no rules about when to follow and when to break rules or how to follow them.

The Christ consciousness is not rebellion and revolution. It is not in itself destruction of the old. It is reformulation and change, a new organization of eternal values that have already existed in the old consciousness but which must be expressed in a new way in the new age. The Christ consciousness brings a new morality that little by little wipes out the outer commandments and the outer regulations and the outer written and unwritten laws. However, I repeat, laws are still necessary for quite a time in your terms, but the trend is in this direction. Where you are in your lower self and act it out, you need those laws to protect others. But where you have outgrown the lower self, you do not need to be told not to bring harm onto others. You know it, you have no desire to do so.

In the more complex matters of personal relationships to self and others, the laws are already dissolving, for the new consciousness makes them superfluous. To the degree you allow God to awaken in you, you liberate your inner God, and then outer laws will disappear. The laws of morality will be completely flexible and will be what they actually are. Each case is different. But for that, you need the labor of self-knowledge, the courage and honesty of self-knowledge so that you cannot be corrupted by the motives of the lower self. You also need to make the effort to take each individual issue as a separate new issue and to deal with it completely anew. That is the action of the adult, mature entity, and mankind is moving toward that goal. But it cannot be done when change is opposed or resisted, for this flexible attitude requires a constantly changing world. Freedom and change are inseparable. Enslavement and rigidity are equally inseparable. If you want it all so simple that you won't have to search and labor and grope and put energy and attention to whatever the issue may be, if you want it all handed to you, you need to deal with inflexible rules that confine and enslave. Only he who has overcome his rebellion against authority because he is his own inner authority, because he has that honesty, can be free. That means embracing change. Each issue requires a changed, new, different, very moving and flexible approach. What may appear as a similar situation that required a certain approach, may in fact be quite different and require an entirely new approach. So, freedom is completely dependent on your ability to change.

Now, my friends, I have given you material to ponder. Go deeply into yourself. I say most of you are ready to use this material very productively not only on the intellectual level, but a lot I have said to you will take root inside and can be observed on an inner level. You can begin to institute true freedom by your willingness to change your mind, your beliefs, your attitudes, your assumptions, by your willingness to give up the obsolete that confines you and thus to liberate your inner God and establish true self-responsibility where you no longer need the confinement and the rigid rules of outer law.

Find that part within that can create an echo now to the words I have given you. Let these words nourish and strengthen you where you need it most. Make room for that ever more emerging new consciousness as it spreads on the inner plane, and fully embrace the movement and go with it. Trust that this can only enhance you and your life. You are all being blessed in truth and in love. Be your God.
