

THE UNIVERSALITY OF CHANGE -- REINCARNATIVE PROCESS IN THE SAME LIFE SPAN

Greetings, my very beloved friends here. Again we are gathered together so as to exchange through my giving to you where the need is greatest and through your receiving where your need is greatest. You thus fulfill a universal need. This universal need is the constant movement toward expansion. All organisms in the entire created universe move toward that expansion that is innate, that follows the seed plan within the organism.

What is the seed plan? It is truly allowing divine substance to infiltrate all that is. And that substance is never static. It contains limitless possibilities for being, for expression, for creative manifestation in literally limitless ways of joyousness, of ecstasy, of wisdom -- to such an extent that it cannot even be put into human language. Wherever this movement is stopped, a break in consciousness and energy occurs.

On the human level of development, for example, this break manifests in the process of death. But it is only a break. Consciousness and energy are resumed, as it were, on another level. Just as when you sleep, there is a break in consciousness on one level, but consciousness continues on another level. So the break is as illusory -- it only occurs on the manifest level -- as the fear of movement.

Movement toward expansion implies a willingness to change. And this is what we are truly concerned with at this particular juncture on your path. You all know that there is a countermovement in the human soul, and that is fear of change. Many of you are quite capable of connecting with the fear of change. And I say to you, it is equally important to connect with the deeper movement, the deeper expression of your soul that constantly moves toward change. Fuller self-expression means change. If there is no change, there cannot be self-expression.

Let us take this first purely on the physical level so as to demonstrate the principle. A physical organism constantly goes through phases and periods of change. That change at first may be so subtle and gradual that it is hardly noticeable, but cumulatively it becomes very noticeable indeed. Just consider the drastic change of an infant growing into childhood, then into adolescence, and later into adulthood. Think of how the physical organs, the body, the whole appearance change in the course of the years from infant to child to adolescent to adulthood to old age, and then a further metamorphosis takes place. This is already beyond the human vision.

So there are cycles of change which, if they were hindered, result in atrophy and finally in death. Let us suppose you put a human organism into such a constricted space that its further organic movements are hindered. It is very easy to imagine how this would affect the organism. It would be an antilife process.

It is no different with the psychic organism, the spiritual organism, the mental and emotional organism. Yet human consciousness has created a mass image of very old origin so deeply embedded in the human psyche that it still needs to be eradicated. That mass image says that change is to be feared. This image creates a condition in the human psyche that can be likened to a physical restriction which prevents the human organism from its natural expansion. The space provided by the image is so narrow that this natural expansive movement cannot occur.

The belief that this mass image perpetuates is that only an unchanging condition is secure. Now, my friends, this mass image is extremely strong and so profound in its significance and its effect that it is indeed responsible for the creation of death. For you cannot experience life in any other way but according to your conviction. I have mentioned this many, many times throughout the years of our contact. But still this principle is vastly overlooked. And still the tendency exists to view the world in reverse or upside down. You mistakenly take certain phenomena as though they were inevitable, and you then see what is actually the effect as the cause. In other words, you see death -- it is an unknown appearance, an unknown phenomenon -- and you then conclude your fear of change is a result of this unknown phenomenon. In reality your fear of death is the effect of the belief that change leads into the unknown and must therefore be feared. The unknown is viewed exclusively as something negative and fearsome.

If you believe change is fearsome, you will atrophy the spiritual and psychic musculature of your system and box yourself into a state of non-movement and non-expansion in which you hardly breathe in order not to allow change to take place. And that is literally, to some varying degree, the human condition. So it is extremely important for you, my friends, who are the pioneers of the new age, to create the new consciousness within you that does not fear change, that trusts change as a completely natural and desirable phenomenon.

If you examine your consciousness, you will always find in one way or another a blind reaction that expresses the belief that you must not move in order not to endanger yourself. Trust in life is just the opposite. You need to begin deliberately, intentionally, and consciously to conceive of change as a desirable and joyful movement in which you claim further realization of joyous experience. I would like you to remember these words and indelibly imprint them upon your soul substance. As you do this, you will no longer halt the natural movement to follow your own fuller self-expression into more unity within, into more peace, into more serenity, into more joy, into more creativity, into more wholeness.

Time itself is an illusion that, as I stated recently, stems from the ongoing movement of all that is alive. Time is also a product of the belief that the future must be avoided and the past held on to in order not to cease existing. It is your innate false belief, the innate false belief of all mankind. Only when man alters this belief with courage and faith will the manifestations of time and death change, and also in this realm. It always requires courage, the taking of an apparent risk, to have the faith to believe in something new, something positive. By allowing to flow with the movement of life, you will increasingly within your lifetime expand your positive experience of life. As you thus gain trust in the universe in which you dwell, in which you operate as an integral part, so will you trust that which now seems mysterious -- although it may actually be mysterious by virtue of being unknown and new -- does not hold threats for you.

Imagine a life in which there is no fear of death. How would you live? If you are a highly developed, conscious, and God-expressing individual, no fear of death would mean unending joy, a fearless existence in which you bring the innate potentials of your divinity to ever greater expression. But if you are still half asleep and if you therefore fear universal life or expanding, moving, changing into universal life, then no fear of death would perhaps make you even lazier and less motivated to move and to develop and to experience.

Now I am not saying here that fear of death is given you as a tool with which to manipulate you into further initiative. But I say to you that the fear of death that you have created through your fear of moving and changing can also become its own medicine. It then works for you in a self-healing way. I have explained this before as one of the most remarkable manifestations of the benign nature of creation: the evil unwittingly or wittingly created by individual entities becomes the very agent with which evil heals itself. All self-produced errors and the resulting fears, suffering, and negativities can, if so chosen, become your means of coming out of that state.

As you grow and overcome distrust of change, you will no longer prohibit yourself from changing and developing and expanding. Then you shall experience the universe and life as intensely trustworthy, desirable, beautiful, and secure. What you feared in the tomorrow will have become a joyous today. Therefore, what is behind the curtain of so-called death need not be feared even if it is unknown. Other life experiences that lay once in the unknown future have now become a joyous present. Consequently, you will now also trust the unknown future.

As you cease fearing future death, this new attitude becomes more known in your innermost being, in your intuitive perception. So as you expand and as you grow, my friends, not only do you become whole and acclimatized to intense, joyous self-expression; you completely lose the fear of changing. You visualize change as the most positive, desirable state possible. You may not even know exactly how joyous the tomorrow can be, but your visualization and the emotional climate are one of trust and desire to move into this change, to experience yourself in a new and different way that is forever more desirable, more renewed, more alive, more interesting, more fascinating. And as the threat of tomorrow is taken away through your new attitude even though tomorrow is not known as yet, you intuitively experience the non-threatening aliveness of your soul, beyond your physical existence. Thus fear of death becomes totally eliminated in the person who realizes himself, his God nature, and who therefore does not block the change that is joyfully waiting within every one of your cells -- the physical as well as the psychic cells.

So I say to you, my beloved friends, do not halt the movement that is innately an expression of life -- of natural life. Allow it to unfold in confidence, for nothing but good can come from it if you visualize it as such. But if you visualize change as bad, that very idea must bring it about. So begin to visualize your change as good, as joyful and secure, as interesting and alive, as serene and exciting.

For those of you who fully encourage this movement -- have the courage to encourage it, to not halt it, have the wisdom to recognize the folly of fearing it -- to those of you I say: you already begin to overcome death. You begin to overcome death not only in the sense I spoke before, that the fearsome unknown ceases to be fearsome and is trusted and therefore eventually intuitively perceived -- a state you cannot now imagine -- but you also overcome death in another, much more direct sense. About this I would like now to speak, for it is a new concept I have not touched upon before, and it is time for you to comprehend it and to take it into your consciousness.

The concept and truth of reincarnation is discussed and taken for granted. There are many theories about it. As you know, I am, as a rule, quite reluctant to speak about past or future lives. But there is one phenomenon that I would like to discuss here and that is usually completely neglected or denied in spiritual teachings. A person who is truly on a path of accelerated development can and frequently does literally reincarnate in the same lifetime. Before incarnation, you plan, as you know and as I have explained, a task for yourself. You plan a certain environment, certain conditions, certain fulfillments that you set for yourself as a task with the aid of spiritual advisers who are equipped to help you in the planning. Now there are many, many human beings who barely arrive at fulfilling this task. And many return with the task unfulfilled and have to come back into a new embodiment to try again, perhaps this time with different conditions. This you know. This I have discussed.

But another, quite different phenomenon is also possible. And that is when a human being fulfills the task and is then ready through such an accelerated path to take on a further task that would ordinarily come in a new embodiment after the old body is left behind, after spending some so-called time not in the body. Thus a new incarnation can be undertaken without leaving the old body behind and creating a new body. This laborious change and break in consciousness can be eliminated if the personality is truly devoted to give all of itself to his own fulfillment and expansion and to his capacity to change its inherent seed plan, even the seed plan that would ordinarily be brought to fruition only in what you would term a new incarnation. It can be done within the same life span. The life that would be terminated at an earlier period can then be extended, and the new seed plan can be "taken out" and become the task within this life span. Or, a life that might have continued in very different circumstances -- according to the premises of the old plan -- completely changes in conditions, feelings, expressions, experiences, environment, and task. New talents may manifest, and old ones modify and express differently. Thus a new task fulfillment can take place in the same incarnation.

Now, I say that a path such as this one you have chosen is indeed a very rare and intense one. And you can, all or most of you, truly feel when this is possible. Some of you may already connect intuitively with a complete change in your life manifestation, in your life experience so that other potentialities that would have remained dormant in the incarnation you were born into can now come to the fore. With less development, these potentialities would remain to be expressed only in a future lifetime.

When this happens, it is a wonderful occurrence. It is an acceleration of the movement in a very organic way. And I say to you, in this period of extended energetic influx of the Christ consciousness in the new age, there are more individuals who, through this influx, open themselves up to it. When you do not oppose it, when you do not shrink away from it, when you trust it and go with it, you can indeed bring forth a second incarnation within one embodiment.

I would now like to suggest to you a very active meditation and visualization in which you trust change as the most desirable, positive, brilliant, and joyful phenomenon that you want to go with and not stem against.

A further suggestion to be considered in this meditation has to do with the familiar. You feel safe on familiar territory even though this territory may realistically be less safe than the unfamiliar one. So it frequently happens that a person remains in a very constricted and confined circumference in order to avoid the imagined danger of the unfamiliar. A full life always means to step beyond the old fences and make new territory your own familiar ground in which you soon feel as comfortable as in the old. Realizing yourself means feeling comfortable in a new self-expression. That is the task. And only the first few whiffs of the new experience are unfamiliar. Soon the new becomes the familiar, and you expand your circumference. You expand the territory of your psychic "at-homeness" until yet further realms wait to be made your own, until finally all of the universe, all of the states of consciousness and the states of mind are truly your own, intensely familiar. Then you are one with the universe.

Now, are there any questions in regard to this topic?

QUESTION: The concept of reincarnation in the same life is very moving, very touching. What I want to ask you is, in such a process is the person aware of it? Are there any physical signs? Does it occur in sleep or in a waking state?

ANSWER: It occurs in a gradual way on the outer level that may not be immediately sensed or perceived by the individual. But there is definitely a change. The change is instigated by the soul in the spirit world in the state of sleep in which discussions with the spiritual advisers always take place when a person is on a developmental path and therefore in touch with his origins and with his advisers. So this is discussed and planned on another level of reality. On the manifest, physical level, you may experience it first as a gradual process, a gradual change of attitudes, interests, activities, environment, expression, etc. Later on, retrospectively, as a cumulative process, you see that your life has become very different. But the difference is realized not in an abrupt way, but in a gradual way. Sometimes there is crisis, deep crisis that indicates the changeover, but this crisis is in principle no different from physical death and rebirth. They, too, are often crises for those who are still in a dim state of consciousness. It is of course less traumatic in one way in that there is no cut in consciousness that has to be laboriously regained through a searching effort. And that is the great advantage of reincarnation in the same life.

QUESTION: In this type of reincarnation within the same life, do different aspects of the entity come forth?

ANSWER: Yes, aspects that were not called forth in the first incarnation of that particular lifetime. New aspects may awaken that may never have manifested in this same lifetime. On the other hand, aspects that were particularly emphasized in the incarnation that took place first may then die down after the secondary rebirth. They are no longer of interest, they no longer serve a purpose, they are now put aside. They may have fulfilled their function. Therefore the personality loses interest in them. This is why a person sometimes completely changes his sphere of interest in the course of such a spiritual path. That may indeed indicate such an incarnatory process, but not necessarily. It may also be that the person had first veered off from his original plan but later became sufficiently open to sense it, and thus he changed course. It may also be that the same talents and interests reappear, perhaps having improved very much or directed into a different expression.

QUESTION: Can you tell us why, with the influx of the new Christ consciousness energy, this process has become so accelerated?

ANSWER: Because the energy is extremely strong. The energy expresses the highest caliber of consciousness, of purity, of love, of development. It is of such a high rate of frequency that it can be beneficially experienced only by these souls, consciousnesses, and personalities who are compatible with it. This is why, otherwise, this same energy creates crisis -- negative manifestations. If you stem against it, if you fear its influx and contract against it, it will appear to be a negative force, yet it is the highest, most potently beautiful, loving, and wise force -- which only shows once again that one and the same thing can be experienced in entirely different ways. It depends on the consciousness, on the perceptions and conceptions, on the expectations and outlook of the individual in question.

QUESTION: Is it possible for two different aspects of the same entity to reincarnate in one lifetime simultaneously? Two different personalities in two different bodies, being part of the same entity?

ANSWER: My friends, if you really look at it in a deeply truthful and realistic way: everyone is an aspect of the same Entity. That is the truth.

QUESTION: Is it possible that fear of life is really a fear of dying and reincarnation within this life -- the process of giving up the old and moving on to the new?

ANSWER: Yes, that is what I said in this lecture. Life is an intensely, constantly moving phenomenon. Therefore it is constantly changing. Now, if change is feared, then life is feared and, naturally, death is feared as well. Death is only one aspect of life. It must be feared as much as life. They always go together. Change and movement mean constantly dying from an old state into a new one but always taking aspects of the old along in renewed form and manifestation. He who completely accepts and embraces life cannot fear death, and vice versa. It is one and the same phenomenon; therefore one and the same attitude must prevail about life, death, change, movement.

QUESTION: Concerning my recent crisis, I have connected with what you said in this lecture, and I'd like to know whether this is actually a rebirth for me at this point?

ANSWER: My dearest friends, all of you, this question I will never answer. It is something you have to experience intuitively within and know and feel within and never need a confirmation from without.

QUESTION: When you speak of change or the fear of change, I seem to react differently. I have always been attracted to change and have always been afraid of static situations. I see that for me this is a way of running away. Could you comment on this?

ANSWER: This kind of desire for change, as you describe it, is very often the misinterpreted desire for the organic, real inner change that the personality denies. Just because it is feared in its real and deeper sense and because this fear causes stagnation, change on a more superficial level is sought as a substitute.

QUESTION: During this lecture I had this image of another being, like me, existing beyond me, that goes on and doesn't die. It is eternal. It is me eternal. I felt that it is my task to link up with it. I get an inkling of what it is and that the more I get in touch with it, the more I will become unified with it.

ANSWER: Of course that is what it is all about. The higher self is always there, and you can always link up with it. And when you do, take it seriously. Do not push it aside as an illusion. It is so real, it is so beautiful. It is life sustaining.

All right, my dearest and most beloved friends, perhaps all of you sense from the nature of tonight's topic how much you have grown and are growing and are moving toward a new area within your inner universe, ready for further self-expression, ready to seek change as something to cherish and trust. Visualize yourself in that way so that you can become more fully active as the carriers of this new, bright culture. The new person coming to live and function in this new age is one who never fears change, who constantly is ready for change, but not out of fear and escape or lack of full commitment to the depth of the now, to settling down into what is. But in this full commitment, in this peaceful "nowness" in which you give your fullest to whatever it is you are doing, to all of yourself, to all of your activities. You intuitively sense the inner rhythm, the inner cycle of movement with which you harmoniously flow. Thus you no longer need the old outer structure in which what is right now must unquestioningly be right tomorrow or next year. In your new age community, you learn already and will continue to see that what is right for now may still be right tomorrow, but it may not be right and organic the day after tomorrow. And it may even already change tomorrow. There are no rules. Only your connectedness with your greater reality, with your higher self can make you aware of when such change is true and when it is an evasion. As with everything else, so with change -- it can manifest in a divine, rhythmic way that is utterly organic or can be, as I said in answer to a question before, a superficial substitute because the real change is avoided. Only when you constantly look for your connectedness with your highest wisdom and are committed to it will you know the organic rightness of when and how changed expressions are within the seed plan of the particular organism (group organism or individual one), when change is desirable, productive, creative, and furthering your own self in cohesion with the universe.

With this, my very dearest ones, I bless you once again. Love and gratitude of the spiritual universe is coming forth to all of you who give of yourself to yourself and thus to the greater venture. Be blessed, all of you!
